

TODAY

THE NEW BILLIE HOLIDAY

Erykah Badu
MAGAZINE

WHY DO PARENTS DO IT?

Libby Purves
on our child-centred society
WEEKEND

BRITISH GRAND PRIX

How Jordan are gearing up
CAR 97/SPORT

DIVORCE

How a wife can get a better deal
WEEKEND MONEY

MONDAY

THE TIMES FOR ONLY 10P EVERY MONDAY

PLUS: DIRECTORY, FOR THE BEST 7-DAY TV AND RADIO LISTENING FOR YOUNG TIMES READERS

Prison service considers turning military bases into jails

Tilt reviewing sites

BY RICHARD FORD
HOME CORRESPONDENT

SIX SITES owned by the Ministry of Defence are being considered for conversion into emergency accommodation to cater for the rising prison population, which is threatening to engulf jails in England and Wales.

The bases, either disused or about to be closed by the Ministry, have been identified as having the potential to be speedily turned into jails holding low risk offenders.

Richard Tilt, Director-General of the Prison Service, disclosed yesterday that the service was reconsidering former military bases for housing criminals as the prison population reached a record 62,067.

The latest figure is only 561 short of the absolute capacity of the 135 jails in England and Wales. With the population rising by 300 a week, prisons will be full before the end of the month and the service would be forced into putting offenders into police cells at a cost of up to £2,000 a week for each prisoner.

Mr Tilt told The Times: "We are looking again at Ministry of Defence sites to see whether there are any that are suitable. They are our preferred option." He would not disclose the sites under consideration although most are in the north of England where population pressures are at their greatest.

It is thought the service wants two sites to hold about a total of 1,000 inmates and relieve population pressures which are restricting regimes in jails. But any proposal to convert a former military base would meet strong opposition from "not in my backyard" campaigners who delayed earlier proposals for emergency accommodation.

The service dropped plans to convert a former RAF base at Finningley near Doncaster in south Yorkshire at the end of last year after opposition from the local Labour-controlled council. It had wanted to take an 18-month lease on the base to house up to 300 low risk Category C prisoners.

Mr Tilt also said the Prison Service is to fight to overturn opposition to another of its proposals for emergency prison space. It is to appeal to the Department of the Environment to be allowed to convert a former Pontin's holiday camp, Middleton Towers, into a jail for 700 inmates.

Prisoners are also being affected by the population pressures with an estimated 10,800 doubled up in cells designed for one inmate and offenders being bused from the North to the South to make way for prisoners held in jail on remand.

Mr Tilt said the number of prisoners doubled up would reach 12,000 by November when the overall jail population is estimated to reach 64,000. However, the service is wary of relying on official estimates as the figures keep being overtaken by the numbers arriving in jail. In September 1996 it was estimated that the number in jail would reach 63,100 by March next year, a figure the service now expects will be reached within a matter of weeks.

Mark Healy, chairman of the Prison Officers Association, spoke of the dangers facing the system because of overcrowding. "The service has a responsibility for the safety of its staff and inmates and to continue in this vein means something is going to give."

He urged Jack Straw, the Home Secretary, to take emergency action and order the executive release of some prisoners, as occurred in the 1980s under the Conservative Government.

Loyalists condemn parades 'sell-out'

BY NICHOLAS WATT, CHIEF IRELAND CORRESPONDENT

MODERATE Orangemen faced a backlash from hardline Unionists yesterday after cancelling or redirecting four of today's July 12 parades.

Dissidents within the Orange Order condemned the gesture as a sell-out to the IRA, and urged Unionists to pull out of peace talks.

The Belfast County Grand Lodge, whose members signed up to the agreement on Thursday night, issued a statement yesterday "deploring the fact" that one of its lodges would not be marching today. It said: "We call on all Unionist politicians to unite and immediately withdraw from the 'talks process' until such times as our Government deals once and for all with the Roman Catholic republicanism and the oppression of the British people of Ulster."

The Belfast Lodge did not criticise its district lodge in the Ballynafeigh area of south Belfast, which agreed not to march along the nationalist Lower Ormeau Road this morning. Instead, it blamed the Government for failing to provide "adequate security against the threat of paramilitary violence."

The future erupted after four lodges agreed to restrict or abandon their parades. Marches along the Lower Ormeau Road and through Newry were cancelled, a parade through the centre of Londonderry was moved to Limavady, and the one in Armagh will avoid the Catholic Shambles area.

The decision came after Ronnie Flanagan, the RUC Chief Constable, told the Orangemen that there was a serious risk of terrorism if the marches went ahead, and that thousands of republicans would be bused into the four areas to oppose the parades.

The announcements were praised across the political spectrum yesterday, including a grudging word of welcome from Gerry Adams, the president of Sinn Féin, who said: "I acknowledge the significance of the decisions taken by the Orange Order which have created a breathing space."

The decisions also transformed relations between nationalists and Unionists. In Newtownbutler, Co Fermanagh, the two sides reached an agreement after months of deadlock over a parade through the village today.

While the security forces breathed a sigh of relief that serious violence would be averted, the Orange Order leadership was left grappling with an internal revolt. Joel Patton of the hardline Spirit of Drumcree group, led the criticism. He said: "The decision shows the complete incompetence and the cowardice of the leadership of the Orange Order. I believe that either these men are removed and replaced or the Orange Order itself will be destroyed."

He urged Orangemen to turn up at the site of the four marches today, saying: "Don't acquiesce in this. Make your feelings known because these people are betraying you."

The Rev Ian Paisley, the leader of the Democratic Unionists, condemned the Orange offer as a "declaration of surrender", but said that his party would leave the multi-party talks only if the Ulster Unionists did the same. David

Continued on page 2, col 7

Angling kinship among the sexes — Nicola Church, England's leading woman fly-fisher, with Terry Hall, left, and Graham Thompson

Sex war in sport spreads to angling

BY MICHAEL HORNSBY
COUNTRYSIDE CORRESPONDENT

WAR between the sexes has broken out in the world of fishing with a broadside from one of Britain's leading anglers, against the distracting and inhibiting presence of women on the riverbank.

Growing numbers of women are cramping the style of male anglers who no longer feel able to swear freely when they lose a fish or to answer calls of nature, he claims.

This cri de coeur comes in the same week that the Corporation Street actor, Johnny Briggs, outraged women golfers by calling them "cock-roaches" who should be confined to all-female clubs.

In both cases the suggestion is that women do not understand, or are unwilling to adapt to, the culture of male-dominated sports and are spoiling the fun for the true participants. Des Taylor, who

Continued on page 2, col 5

Blunkett puts student debts on sale to raise £3bn

BY JOHN O'LEARY, EDUCATION EDITOR

DAVID BLUNKETT, the Education Secretary, launched the Labour Government's first privatisation yesterday with a surprise Bill designed to raise £3.1 billion from the sale of debt from student loans.

The scheme, first mooted by the Conservatives after plans for a wholesale privatisation of the Student Loans Company had foundered, had been halted by the election. But Mr Blunkett said the sale was a "critical element" in the maintenance of existing spending plans.

Officials insisted that there would be "no negative consequences" for borrowers. The terms of existing loans will be unchanged, but the Bill leaves open the possibility of the purchasers introducing new and more aggressive collection arrangements.

More than £2 billion of debt will be offered for sale, with another £1 billion expected to accumulate in the coming year. Twenty finance companies and banks have expressed interest. Experts were taken by surprise by the announcement, although receipts of £1.6 billion were included in the Budget. There had been no mention of a Bill in the Queen's Speech.

Ian Crawford, a member of a team of academics at the London School of Economics specialising in student loans, said the move amounted to a "fire sale" which would undervalue the debt. He had expected the Government to wait for this month's report on higher education by Sir Ron Dearing before taking decisions on student finance.

The previous government had intended to proceed with the sale using its original legislation. But Mr Blunkett said he had acted to "put on a clearer footing" his power to provide incentives and safeguard both taxpayers and the buyers. He expected the Bill to be non-controversial.

Nicholas Barr, who led the LSE team, said the Government might only recoup half the face value of the debt while the repayment system was in place. He published a pamphlet this week claiming that a sale could release an annual "pot of gold" of £1.6 billion for investment in education if repayment was linked to National Insurance.

Graduates are allowed to defer repayment if their earnings fall below £15,000. Almost half of those with loans were in this position last year.

Dr Barr said: "Going ahead in a hasty way while there are such high levels of deferment amounts to a waste of taxpayers' money. If the private sector was assured of a better repayment flow, the price could be much higher."

University vice-chancellors said they had no objection to the sale, as long as future proceeds went into the higher education system. But a spokeswoman said there would be concern if the system was fragmented and graduates had to deal with a different lender each year.

Student debts rise, page 9

Times narrows sales gap

THE gap between full-price sales of The Times and The Daily Telegraph has narrowed to fewer than 30,000, according to figures from newspaper industry auditors.

The Daily Telegraph's average daily newsstand sales were 710,295 in June, against 680,494 for The Times, the Audit Bureau of Circulations said yesterday.

The bureau's figures also show that The Daily Telegraph relied on cut-price sales for more than 25 per cent of its net circulation in June; the corresponding figure for The Times was less than 2 per cent. It is the first time that the bureau has published figures for full-price and cut-price sales separately. The distinction is important because advertisers base their rates on full-price sales.

Gay clergy row

Homosexuality is threatening to split the Church of England and the general synod opening in York this weekend faces protests, demonstrations and "outings" over the issue. A survey is expected to show that many bishops are turning a blind eye to practising homosexuals. Page 12

Secure your family's future for less than 20p a day.

In an ideal world you will always be there for your family. But should the worst happen would they be able to cope without you?

For the monthly equivalent of 20p a day you can help safeguard your family's financial future.

Legal & General's Family Protection Plan will ensure that a lump sum is paid should you die or become eligible for terminal illness benefit during the term you select. It's easy to budget for as you only pay a premium for a fixed period of time, and the amount you pay each month stays the same.

For a quotation call the number below. Alternatively, contact your financial adviser.

HOW LITTLE IT COULD COST YOU

TERM	PER DAY
15 yrs	£58,353
15 yrs	£90,000

Based on a male non-smoker aged 30 years. (Insurance subject to individual details)

For an instant quote on low cost cover CALL FREE ON: 0500 33 66 66

QUOTING THE REFERENCE NUMBER 827/045.

Lives are open from 9pm, Monday to Friday and 10pm to 11pm, Saturday and Sunday. For your protection, calls on this number will usually be recorded and monitored.

Further information on Legal & General products is available on our Website: <http://www.legalandgeneral.co.uk>

Now and then, we may tell you about other products or services offered by the Legal & General Group of companies that we believe may be of interest to you. If you would prefer not to receive this carefully selected information, please contact us at the address below.

Legal & General Assurance Limited is a representative of the Legal & General Insurance Group, members of which are regulated by the Financial Services Authority and are licensed for the purposes of recommending, selling and selling life assurance and investment products having regard to the needs of the client.

Legal & General Assurance Limited, Registered in England No. 20200. Registered Office: Temple Court, 11 Queen Victoria Street, London EC4N 4TP

Stoned rabbit goes to the dogs on his one bad trip

BY ROBIN YOUNG

A REAL life Dylan the Rabbit, whose existence was one long ride on The Magic Roundabout, came to a tragic end when he was too laid back to escape the jaws of a voracious Staffordshire bull terrier.

The story of the latter-day Dylan, a rabbit so permanently stoned that he was known as Bonkers, was told in Sedgemoor magistrates' court, in the Somerset town of Bridgwater, when the animal's owner, Gillian Brown, 32 and unemployed, appeared on drug charges. Bonkers, the magistrates heard, was a "gentle, peace-loving" rabbit, normal in everything except his diet. He turned up his nose at carrots, lettuce and dandelion leaves and ate cannabis for breakfast, lunch and tea. He even indulged in late night pot sessions with his hippy owner. Brown grew cannabis alongside the M5 in Huntworth, Somerset and fed it to Bonkers because it was poor quality stuff. She was visited by RSPCA officials but denied that it was cruel to give her six-month-old rabbit cannabis. She admitted possessing cannabis worth £350 and a small amount of amphetamines, and was ordered to do 50 hours' community service and one year's probation with £40 costs.

After the hearing, she said: "Bonkers was a lovely creature, a bit like Dylan of The Magic Roundabout. He would eat cannabis like grass, get high, crash out for a while, then come back for more... sometimes he would get zoned out and freeze and just stare into space. I tried to give cannabis to my dog and hamster as well, but they didn't take to it."

After the case, Robin Walker, a member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, said: "The cannabis diet would not have done any harm although it could have affected his memory. But then rabbits are not too hot on poetry anyway."

Brown said Bonkers died after "reacting too slowly" to the terrier. He was so "spaced out" that he virtually allowed himself to be eaten alive. "It was his only bad trip."

BY NICHOLAS WATT, CHIEF IRELAND CORRESPONDENT

Lord Molyneux remained typically self-effacing yesterday and praised the County Grand Masters for their "great courage".

TONY BLAIR had a 20-minute telephone conversation with the Irish Prime Minister yesterday to discuss the decision by Oranmore to cancel and reroute parades (see page 10).

Mr. Blair, Bertie Ahern for his statement, in which Mr. Ahern said the Oranmore's decision was "a positive gesture by the Orange Order and the Government believes that it deserves an equally positive response from nationalists".

The two men said they were determined to keep the peace process moving and would stay in touch during the summer.

There was widespread relief in the Irish Republic that a feared weekend of violence had been averted. Sean B. Glynn, Roman Catholic Primate of All Ireland, said the Oranmore's decision was a victory for courage and compromise.

John Bruton, the leader of the opposition Fine Gael party, said the decision to reroute was a mark of self-confidence and strategic thinking within the Unionist community.

Continued from page 1

Trimble, the Ulster Unionist leader, said: "I think the matter needs consideration, but I am not going to be precipitous." He added that he had mixed feelings about the Orange Order's gesture. "I am quite sure they do not want their decision to be taken as a permanent decision. It is a purely temporary gesture that has been made in order to deny Sinn Féin/IRA the opportunity to cause mayhem."

His comments underlined the deep unease within the Ulster Unionist Party over the parades issue. However, Jeffrey Donaldson, the DUP MP

BY PHILIP BASSETT AND STEPHEN FARRELL

strikes strike action is now inevitable. It is a week because employment law requires the union to give seven days' notice. Mr Ayling yesterday wrote to the TGWU proposing a "way forward" to resolve the dispute with the TGWU's cabin crew union. He said that at the end of the BASSA strike really does present an opportunity for peace. I believe we both

He adds: "Most men swear and one of the places we do it is on the bank with our mates. An example might be a big fish leaping out of the water right over your bail. You don't say 'golly gosh, wasn't that a large fish,' you say 'that's me doing it.'"

Mr Taylor, whose wife Margaret does not fish (she is one of Mr Briggs's golf-playing "cockroaches"), particularly objects in women who accompany spouses or partners to ing women on the riverbank now". Women swear too if they lose a big fish. Men do not like it if they are drawn against you and get beaten."

Nicola Church, England's leading female fly-fisher, said: "Male competitors sometimes urinate into a small bucket if the need arises during a long session, but that does not worry me or them."

Women anglers, page 4
Leadline article, page 23

Royal Festival Hall, London, August 18-24, 1997

SEE THE QUALIFYING CROSSWORD IN
THE TIMES ON THURSDAY JULY 17

(And enter a different world)

To reserve a suite and arrange a personal tour of The Edinburgh Residence, or for more information, please return the form below or call us on 0131 226 3380.

Discover The Edinburgh Residence during this exciting time for only £249 for two people for 2 nights. This offer will allow you to find our muse about time ownership at The Edinburgh Residence and includes a full Scottish breakfast each day, and two free tickets to the show of your choice, subject to availability.

While you're here, you'll also enjoy a personal tour of the property.

0131 226 3380

I would like more information about The Edinburgh Residence

Period of Foreign Inspection at Visits ☐ Short Break Stays ☐ Time Ownership ☐

Surname _____

Title _____ First Name _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Telephone _____ Date _____ Etc _____

Return to _____

The Edinburgh Residence, 7 Rothesay Terrace, Edinburgh EH3 7RY

FMD

Full written information is available from the above address.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Companies that delay settling their commercial debts will be named in a "table" that will show that small firms can avoid doing business with them. The table will be compiled by the Federation of Small Businesses with the support of the Department of Trade and Industry. It is expected to give the payment records of all 18,000 companies whose details are held at Companies House, and will be available from the middle of next year.

The table is part of a package of measures planned by the Government to stop late payment of commercial debts. The DTI will publish within the next three weeks its proposals for the statutory imposition of interest on debts which are not settled within a certain time. More than $15 billion is estimated to be owed in business debts.

The first Sinn Féin member of the Irish Parliament in almost 80 years took dole money he was not entitled to, it was disclosed yesterday. Caoimhín Ó Caoláin, 43, who pledged to fight sleaze in Irish politics, claimed £20,000 unemployment benefit for his dependants while his wife was working. He is repaying the money from his parliamentary salary of £34,700. The benefit was claimed from 1986 to 1991 after he left a bank to work full-time for the party.

Franz Fischler, the European Agriculture Commissioner, held out hopes of an end to the ban on the export of British beef yesterday. At a meeting with 200 farmers at the Royal Welsh Agricultural Showground at Builth Wells, Powys, Herr Fischler said the latest proposals being considered by the Government that meat from cattle born after a certain date should be exported once more could offer "the way forward" out of the beef impasse.

An engineer, a carpet fitter and a psychiatrist are due to sail into Portsmouth today after completing a 4,100-mile voyage across the Atlantic in a tiny, open-topped powerboat. Alan Friddy, 43, Steve Lloyd, 39, and Jan Falkowski, 36, set out from Portsmouth, New Hampshire, three weeks ago on board the 24ft Spirit of Portsmouth. Their fourth crew member had to pull out of the journey in Iceland because of seasickness and exhaustion.

No charge for Parking Boxes Over 1000

Arrested from County Park is

MP chases bag snatcher after traffic jam theft

By Stephen Farrell and James Landale

CHERYL GILLAN, the Tory trade spokeswoman, chased a thief along a dual carriageway yesterday after he snatched her handbag while she was caught in traffic.

Mrs Gillan, 45, MP for Chesham and Amersham, was left shaken but unhurt after the thief opened the unlocked passenger door of her Rover Discovery and took the bag from the seat.

She leapt from the car and gave chase along the A40 in Hammersmith, west London, an area notorious for thefts from motorists, while other drivers called police. The thief escaped over a fence.

Mrs Gillan said last night that she had left herself vulnerable to attack by failing to lock the doors. "I was stuck in traffic and this young man just opened up the door and was away with my bag. It had everything in it, my purse, my keys, my cards and my House of Commons pass."

"I slammed the gears into neutral and chased him down the road. It became apparent that I wasn't going to catch him so I came back to the car and called 999 on my mobile telephone.

"I was not hurt but it was a horrible thing to happen. It is a good lesson to women driving to lock their doors and hide their handbags."

The attack happened shortly before 4pm as Mrs Gillan was on her way from the Commons to present an Investors in People award at Chalfont Community College. She immediately contacted her constituency agent to cancel the appointment because she felt in "no fit state to drive".

The bag was later found by a member of the public. Her keys and security pass were inside but the thief had taken the credit cards and all the cash she had withdrawn for a weekend with her mother.

Mrs Gillan, formerly marketing director of an international accounting firm, would not reveal how much cash she had lost, but said: "The thief will have a good weekend."

She was interviewed by police before driving back to her flat in London. Her agent, Richard Hill, said: "When she telephoned me she was very shaken and crying, as anyone would be. She usually leaves her handbag on the passenger seat but puts the central locking on. She admitted she had not done so this time."

"Her first thought was for her constituents and that was why she called me, to let the college know she could not attend. I think the thief simply saw a woman on her own in a fairly new vehicle and carried out an opportunistic crime."

Commander Jonathan Maughan, of the Royal Naval College, greets Spanish dancers before their performance in the opening ceremony of the Greenwich and Docklands International Festival. The welcome marked the first time the public was allowed within the college precinct

Poll-rigging civil servant keeps her job

By Valerie Elliott
Whitehall Editor

THE woman civil servant who tried to swing the Radio 4 Today programme personality of the year poll in favour of Tony Blair is to keep her job at the Ministry of Agriculture.

Jules Hurry, 40, is to return to her £35,000-a-year post in the autumn after facing an internal disciplinary inquiry.

A ministry spokesman confirmed last night that a letter had been sent to Ms Hurry last week and that she would be returning to work in the autumn. Ms Hurry was unavailable for comment. She and her husband, Alan Griffiths, who has worked occasionally for the Liberal Democrats, live in Islington, north London.

She had asked the ministry for unpaid leave from November last year to May to help care for her husband, who has been receiving treatment at a London hospital but during that time was working for the Labour Party's election campaign headquarters at Millbank and who walks with a stick.

The Conservative Party sense they have found another chink in the Government's armour and are to demand a full explanation from ministers.

Nigel Evans, a Tory frontbencher, said: "It is pointless Tony Blair saying that he does not believe in the politicisation of the Civil Service if at the same time someone who is a civil servant and was working at Millbank Tower for the Labour Party is allowed back to work in the Ministry of Agriculture. The House of Commons deserves to be told the results of the investigation into this internal affair."

He said last night that if answers were not forthcoming he would table questions to Mr Blair and to Dr Cunningham. Mr Evans, Tory MP for Ribbles Valley, had raised the question of Ms Hurry before the Commons public service committee in the last Parliament and demanded to know if she was in breach of her contract as an impartial civil servant.

Sir Robin assured him the matter was being taken very seriously in Whitehall and an investigation was taking place. Last night a Cabinet Office spokesman would not elaborate on the matter. "This is a matter for MAFF. Sir Robin has no locus on this."

Whitehall officials launched an immediate investigation after it emerged that a civil servant on leave had been working three days a week for the Labour Party at their Millbank Tower headquarters. The inquiry was ordered internally by Richard Packer, permanent secretary at the ministry.

Her name appeared on the top of a letter faxed to Labour activists urging them to send in nominations for Mr Blair for the Radio 4 Today programme's Personality of the Year feature and to persuade six others to follow suit. Mr Blair was subsequently disqualified by the BBC from taking part in the radio ballot and the affair was deeply embarrassing for the Labour Party. The party said the letter to activists had been written by a junior member of staff and that they would never have authorised such a tactic.

Juvenile offenders get taste of Maori values

By Stewart Tendler
Crime Correspondent

A TEENAGE thief yesterday became the first young offender in the country to begin a pilot scheme based on Maori family values.

Under the scheme, being tested in Hampshire, young offenders attend a family group conference which can include their victims, social workers, police and members of their family, including not only parents but siblings, uncles and aunts. After the conference the offender and his family are left to decide what he should do to make up for the crime. This is then offered to the victim and the scheme's coordinators.

Offenders qualify for the scheme on their second offence when they would otherwise face a court appearance. They have to accept that they committed the crime; and, if their family refuses to attend, they will then face court.

The scheme is based on a system in New Zealand and developed from Maori customs. The Maoris use the pressure and responsibilities of families to keep young offenders from further trouble. The scheme is being tested for two years in the Basingstoke area and two juveniles will take part each month under the auspices of the Hampton Trust, a charity for reforming young offenders.

Ros Cassy, of the trust, said penalties under the scheme could include the young offender selling a personal possession to get money to compensate the victim. The youth could do work for the victim or take up a sporting or community project to keep them out of trouble.

Ms Cassy said that sometimes families felt they could not cope but the conference could offer them support to deal with the child.

No charge for Parker Bowles over crash

By Damian Whitworth
and Stewart Tendler

CAMILLA Parker Bowles will not be prosecuted over her involvement in a car crash in a lane close to Highgrove, the home of the Prince of Wales. Police said last night that there was insufficient evidence to bring charges in connection with the collision, after which Mrs Parker Bowles was accused of fleeing the scene.

Mrs Parker Bowles and the other driver, Carolyn Melville-Smith, were not seriously hurt in the incident near Malmesbury, Wiltshire, on June 11. Miss Melville-Smith's car was badly damaged and in the aftermath of the accident she said that Mrs Parker Bowles had "appeared like a missile" and then left the immediate scene while she was trapped in her Volvo estate.

Mrs Parker Bowles explained that she had left her Ford Mondeo to find a location where she could get a signal on her mobile phone to call for help to the police and the Prince of Wales.

A report on the case was sent to the Crown Prosecution Service by Wiltshire police but lawyers said no charges could be brought. Miss Melville-Smith, 53, an interior designer, said last night that she had not wanted Mrs Parker Bowles to be prosecuted. "So long as I am not left out of pocket, I am happy to let the matter rest."

Pigeons cleared over death of cathedral owl

By Kathryn Knight

PATHOLOGISTS investigating the death of the eagle owl that recently made its home in St Paul's Cathedral, have discovered that Paula, as the bird was named, was in fact Paul.

The post mortem examination at London Zoo yesterday also revealed that the owl's two-week residence in the cathedral was a swansong after two years swooping round the capital.

Contrary to the suspicions of cathedral workers that Paula, or Paul, had been poisoned by a dodgy pigeon or subjected to foul play, the examination revealed it had contracted a bacterial wasting disease and had been ill for several weeks.

Paula, which turned out to be Paul, at St Paul's

The bird stood 20 inches tall with a 5ft wingspan and appeared to be feeding well on pigeons and mice since nesting in the rafters of the cathedral dome.

However its body was spotted on Monday morning lying face down on a ledge by office workers.

Yesterday Andrew Cunningham, a veterinary pathologist from the Zoological Society who performed the autopsy, said the owl had died of necrobacillosis, a bacterial infection that causes tissue to die, and was thin and dehydrated.

"The animal had probably been sick for days, perhaps weeks, given the evidence of long-term spleen infection. It is impossible to say where the infection had come from although necrobacillosis is very unusual in birds."

As for the confusion over gender, a spokeswoman for London Zoo said it was an easy mistake to make. The RSPCA inspector who had named the bird Paula, she said, had had to do it from a distance.

"Owls and birds of prey are very difficult to sex because they don't have obvious genitalia. You can sometimes tell by their plumage but really you have to look surgically. Female eagle owls are usually bigger but we just didn't get close enough to work out its size," she said.

The Queen honours Dunblane teachers

By Shirley English

THE Queen honoured three teachers yesterday for their bravery in the Dunblane massacre. Rod Mayor accepted an award on behalf of his wife, Gwen, who was killed with 16 primary school children.

Mr Mayor and the two teachers who survived, Eileen Harrild, 44, and Mary Blake, 50, received the Queen's Commendation for Bravery, a silver laurel leaf brooch, in a ceremony at the Palace of Holyroodhouse in Edinburgh. Mrs Harrild, a PE teacher, and Mrs Blake, a special needs teacher, were both badly injured in the gun attack and have not returned to work.

The three, accompanied by their families, had tea and chatted with the Queen after a 40-minute private audience. They said later that the parents of the children who died were uppermost in their thoughts.

Mrs Harrild, who was shot four times in the arms and chest by Thomas Hamilton, said: "I just wish we were receiving this award for a different reason."

Rod Mayor was accompanied by his two daughters, Ester, 22, and Deborah, 20, his wife's sister, Joan Bedford, and her parents Edna and Ken Hodgson, from Penrith. He said he felt both privileged and honoured. "Gwen has been recognised for what we always knew she was."

If you like our whiskey, won't you write us at the Jack Daniel Distillery, Lynchburg, Tennessee USA? We enjoy hearing from our friends.

IN THE TENNESSEE MOONLIGHT, some folks think this barrel-house looks like a hotel. But you wouldn't want to sleep here.

The only guests here are barrels of Tennessee Whiskey. They'll age quietly for years, carefully watched over by our barrelmen. And they won't leave until the whiskey inside has gained the color and smoothness our friends have come to expect. There are more comfortable places to sleep in Jack Daniel's country. But none better suited for making a whiskey so rare.

JACK DANIEL'S TENNESSEE WHISKEY

Bare-breasted memorial to designer of Cutty Sark 'is over the top'

By Shirley English

A VOLUPTUOUS statue unveiled yesterday in memory of the designer of the tea clipper Cutty Sark has sparked a bitter row in the village of his birth. Villagers in Inverberrie, near Aberdeen, are outraged that the bare-breasted memorial to Hercules Linton has replaced a more dignified statue which they commissioned and paid for by public subscription 30 years ago.

Protesters carrying placards gathered for the unveiling ceremony yesterday at the entrance to the village, casting a shadow over the start of the Tall Ships Race in Aberdeen.

The new painted wooden statue is based on the tea clipper's original figurehead of the bare-breasted witch from Robert Burns's poem Tam o' Shanter. But villagers, who have formed the Save Our Linton Memorial group, said the figure was too well-endowed and gaudy for their liking. "It belongs in Blackpool Tower," said Alistair Reid, 72, from Inverberrie, who was involved in raising money for the original statue in the 1960s. "It is just obscene and a very vulgar thing to put in front of our children. It's a travesty to the memory of Hercules Linton."

The row began two months ago when council-funded Gourdon and Inverberrie Village Enterprise (GIVE) decided to replace the original fibre-glass statue, which was showing signs of wear and vandalism. The old memorial was based on a sculpture in the National Maritime Museum in Greenwich by Scott Sutherland, the Scottish artist. Villagers raised around £2,000 to commission it and it was unveiled in 1969 by the yachtman Sir Francis Chichester.

Mr Reid said that about two months ago it was removed without consultation and transferred to the headquarters of the Aberdeen Sea Cadet Corps. "That was our statue. It was paid for by public subscription and no-one had the right to take it away," he said. Villagers are now considering legal action to have the statue returned.

Yesterday Jim Leacy, spokesman for the GIVE group, defended the new statue, but said he was going to resign. "This is what the figurehead looked like of the ship. I have been accosted in the street over this. It has been very upsetting," he said.

Farmers on alert for potato beetles

By Audrey Magee

IRISH agriculture officials are on full alert after Colorado beetles were found in a shipment of potatoes from Italy. The 45 beetles, also known as the potato bug, are the largest number found in Ireland for a decade.

The orange and yellow striped insects attack potato leaves and the females deposit up to 500 bright yellow eggs on the underside. The Agriculture Department said that, if left undetected, they would cause enormous damage to the £75 million annual potato crop.

The department has implemented emergency procedures to examine shipments entering the country. The government has preserved the beetles from the Italian cargo to circulate to potato farmers unfamiliar with the insect's shape and size.

The beetle, native to the mid-west United States, originally fed on a wild plant in the potato family. It transferred its allegiance to the cultivated potato planted by settlers.

Measures for open government delayed

Valerie Elliott on snags facing ministers over freedom of information

MINISTERS have had to postpone measures to increase freedom of information because of the complexity of the issues. A White Paper which it had been hoped would be published for the summer recess will not now appear until October.

Among the difficulties are deciding which public authorities should be covered by the legislation. Under proposals being considered by ministers, the BBC and the private utility companies could come within its scope. Ministers have also become bogged down in the question of whether the new law could also apply to police, fire services and any private company which was contracted to do public work.

Reports that senior civil servants have blocked the proposals are wide of the mark although there are apparently some reservations about the cost. But it seems that policy advice from civil servants to ministers will remain outside the legislation.

David Clark, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, in an interview in The Stakeholder, a public service magazine, says: "Any factual or analytical evidence will be made available, but when it comes to advice, I don't want to drive it underground." He fears that officials would avoid putting advice on paper and that more decisions would be made and advice given on the telephone.

Dr Clark also indicated that

Clark unlikely to release advice from officials

he wishes to avoid protracted legal disputes over the release of information and wanted an officer of Parliament, probably the Ombudsman, to decide appeal cases. "I regard this as an issue of human rights and I think the final appeal ought to be to the representatives of the people and not to the judiciary."

The Lord Chancellor, Lord Irvine of Lairg QC, who chairs the ministerial group looking at the proposals, writing in The Times today, hints at the difficulties facing ministers and defends their wish for more time. He makes clear, however, that the Government does want to legislate for freedom of information and says that, rather than taking a soft option of putting an existing code of conduct into statute, ministers were engaged in a "root-and-branch" review of every issue.

Donald Dewar, the Scottish Secretary, also confirmed yesterday the Government's commitment to a Freedom of Information Act but conceded that there were hurdles still to overcome. Another difficulty facing the group is how to track government documentation which exists on paper and as electronic messages.

Senior officials in Whitehall yesterday were irritated that they were being accused of blocking the legislation. They believe that ministers should never have promised to produce a White Paper on such a difficult area within such a narrow timescale.

Ministers themselves realised that they did not have enough time to consider the issues while the devolution White Papers were also about to be published.

The ministerial group met for the first time on Thursday and decided that they wanted to ensure the legislation was workable and also that it fitted in with political expectations. The legislation is still planned for inclusion in the next parliamentary session.

Lord Irvine of Lairg, page 22
Leading article, page 23

The Queen Mother, then Duchess of York, trout fishing in New Zealand in 1927

Feminine angle irresistible bait for male fish

By Kathryn Knight

WELL-known — and often unexpected — faces are among the growing number of women who enjoy casting a line.

Two of Britain's most doughty nonagenarians, Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, who is 97 next month, and Dame Barbara Cartland, who was 90 on Wednesday, have long enjoyed the sport.

Until recently the Queen Mother fished during her annual stay at Balmoral. Dame Barbara was for many years a prolific salmon fisher. On her honeymoon in Sutherland in 1927, she caught her first salmon, a 14-pounder, and three lesser fish on her first attempt, and a hobby was born.

But she said yesterday that a little angling was all right for women but it was better left to men. "Women are such a nuisance. They say, 'I must do this and this and this.' They are doing everything, they are becoming men, and their children are neglected."

Fiona Armstrong, the former television newsreader, has written a beginner's guide to salmon fishing, F is for Fly-Fishing. Dame Diana Rigg, the actress, enjoys angling and recently said that her time spent upon a Scottish estate during her marriage to a landowner had persuaded her that women's sex makes them attractive to their prey. "Their condition makes them extra pheromonic and huge male salmon hunt themselves on to their hook because of it."

Frances Shand Kydd, the mother of Diana, Princess of Wales, has been an angler for 20 years. She said that she had only ever caught male fish, and plenty of those.

In their book Salmon and Women, the Feminine Angle, Peter Behan and Wilma Paterson tell of Lady Graham, mother of the Marquess of Montrose, who was an expert fisherwoman and would often catch fish while the men's lines remained empty. But her name never appeared in the estate game book, which registered catches.

Family of murdered man held by police

By Paul Wilkinson

THE wife, daughter and a son of a man murdered nine months ago have been arrested. The three, and a male employee, are being questioned about the killing of Geoffrey Leeming, 63, who was stabbed to death in his garage in Haxby, near York.

Mr Leeming, a former soldier who ran a drains business, died after he went to check a lock while his wife, Jackie, 55, watched television. He was stabbed several times in the chest with a seven-inch, serrated kitchen knife which was found on a grass verge near by.

Detectives interviewed more than 1,000 people. In May Mrs Leeming appeared on GMTV and publicly denied suggestions that she was linked to the killing.

This year Mrs Leeming and her daughter, Jane, 30, took over the Marcia pub in the near by village of Bishopthorpe. Police arrived at the pub at about 7.30am yesterday and left with the women shortly afterwards.

At the same time her son Stephen, 32, was arrested at the farm where he lives outside York. The fourth person, a 37-year-old employee of the family business, who has not been named, was detained on Thursday night. They were being questioned at police stations in York and Selby.

Soon after her husband's death Mrs Leeming, accompanied by her family, told a press conference: "My husband was cruelly murdered. Whoever did it has taken my life and destroyed the life of my two sons and daughter, too."

Her other son, Neil, was not arrested and was yesterday at the pub. He refused to comment.

Golf club women keep men off par

By Russell Jenkins

A BATTLE of the sexes at a ladies' golf club where almost half the members are men has ended in a truce. The men are celebrating after being granted voting rights but the women, who have held sway since 1894, remain in control of the clubhouse.

Both sexes enjoy the same facilities and drink in the same bar at Wirral Ladies' Golf Club, near Birkenhead. But until now the 190 men, who pay the same £400-a-year fees, have been denied a say in the club's affairs.

The women gave way at an emergency general meeting after the men objected to the arrangement before the local licensing justices. Although they have allowed the men voting rights, they have enshrined the ascendancy of women in the club's articles of association. The club will continue to be called Wirral Ladies' Golf Club; the captain will always be a woman; the chairman of the management committee will also be a woman and lady members will enjoy numerical supremacy on the committee.

Susan Headford, the secretary and manager, said: "We have structured the new articles of association to ensure the traditions, so precious to us, will always be retained."

The Wirral club was formed by Herbert Popper, who built a nine-hole course for his wife, Gillie, and the "leisure ladies of the Wirral". Another nine holes was added as membership grew and in 1928 the women bought the land and formed a limited company.

The women believe that they have conceded enough to retain the club's licence. The case will be heard by Wirral magistrates on Wednesday.

Just what you need to buy your dream home.
Your dream mortgage.

UP TO £6,000
CASHBACK

3%
DISCOUNT UNTIL 1 JULY 1998
5.2% APR
MINIMUM £30,000 LOAN APPLIES

What would you think of a mortgage that gave you up to £6,000 cashback (or 3% of the amount advanced) and a 3% discount until 1 July 1998?

(Now, how handy would that be with solicitors fees to pay and new furniture to buy?)

A mortgage that would cut your first year's monthly payments by 3%?

(That could save you around £111.25 a month).

ALLIANCE LEICESTER

<http://www.alliance-leicester.co.uk>

A mortgage that lets you borrow up to 90% loan to value.

Too good to be true? It's called an Alliance & Leicester 'Discount Plus' mortgage and, pinch, pinch, wacky-wacky, it's true.

Drop in to your local Alliance & Leicester branch or phone 0800 412 214 and we'll tell you more.

No you're not dreaming. Honest.

THE ABOVE £6,000 PROMOTIONAL OFFER IS ONLY AVAILABLE TO FIRST TIME BUYERS WHO APPLY BETWEEN 20TH JUNE AND 31ST SEPTEMBER 1997 FOR FULL DETAILS ABOUT THESE OFFERS, INCLUDING CONDITIONS AND RESTRICTIONS WHICH APPLY PLEASE ENQUIRE AT YOUR LOCAL BRANCH. RATES AND ARE CHARGED ARE VARIABLE AND ARE FOR RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES. ANY OFFER IS FOR MORTGAGES ON AN INTEREST ONLY BASIS. ALTHOUGH OUR DISCOUNTED MORTGAGES ARE ALSO AVAILABLE ON A REPAYMENT BASIS, THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. THE APR AND THE TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE HAVE BEEN CALCULATED ON THE BASIS THAT THE VARIABLE RATE WILL BE THE SAME AS THE DISCOUNTED RATE THROUGHOUT THE TERM OF THE MORTGAGE. IN PRACTICE, HOWEVER, AT THE END OF THE DISCOUNTED RATE PERIOD, OUR BASIC, ANNUAL RATE (CURRENTLY 7.5%) WILL BE CHARGED. OUR DISCOUNTED MORTGAGES ARE ONLY AVAILABLE TO NEW CUSTOMERS OR TO EXISTING BORROWERS MOVING HOME. UNLESS YOU HAVE RECEIVED AN OFFER OF A LOAN, WE RESERVE THE RIGHT TO WITHDRAW THIS MORTGAGE OFFER WITHOUT ANY PRIOR NOTICE. IN SOME INSTANCES, IT IS NOT POSSIBLE TO OBTAIN MORTGAGES (OR RELEASE ON MORTGAGES) AS AN APPLICATION FEE IS PAYABLE IN RESPECT OF THIS PRODUCT. HOW YOU WILL STILL INCUR LEGAL AND VALUATION COSTS. THE CASHBACK EQUALS 3% OF THE LOAN. IS PAYABLE ON COMPLETION OF YOUR MORTGAGE. A MINIMUM LOAN OF £20,000 APPLIES. YOUR HOME IS SECURED FOR THE LOAN AND MUST BE ADEQUATELY INSURED. LOANS ARE SUBJECT TO STATUS AND VALUATION AND ARE ONLY AVAILABLE TO PEOPLE AGED 18 OR OVER. WRITTEN QUOTATIONS AVAILABLE ON REQUEST. FOR INTEREST ONLY MORTGAGES AN APPROPRIATE PERSONAL CREDIT PLAN (PFI) PERSON PLAN OR ENDORSEMENT POLICY FOR THE AMOUNT AND TERM OF THE LOAN MUST ALSO BE ARRANGED. CONTRIBUTIONS FROM MEMBERS WILL BE PAYABLE TO THE COMPANY. HOWEVER, FOR LOANS EXCEEDING 75% OF THE PURCHASE PRICE OR VALUATION (WHICHEVER IS THE LOWER) A HIGH PERCENTAGE LOAN FEE WILL BE CHARGED. DETAILS OF THIS FEE ARE AVAILABLE AT YOUR LOCAL BRANCH. ANY SAVINGS ACCRUED TO IN THIS ADVERTISEMENT ARE BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE AND THE RATE QUOTED. THE DISCOUNT PLUS MORTGAGE IS RESTRICTED TO 90% INCLUDING ONLY EMPLOYED APPLICANTS OF THE PURCHASE PRICE VALUATION (WHICHEVER IS THE LOWER). THE APR QUOTED MAY BE SIGNIFICANTLY DIFFERENT IF YOUR CIRCUMSTANCES DIFFER FROM THE ASSUMPTIONS ON WHICH THE EXAMPLES ARE BASED. RATES AND INFORMATION ARE CORRECT AS AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS. YOUR MORTGAGE REPAYMENTS MAY VARY IN WORKING DAYS RELAY CHARGES IN THE FOLLOWING EXAMPLES THE TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE INCLUDES VALUATION CHARGE OF £150.00 HIGH PERCENTAGE LOAN FEE OF £250.00 SOLICITOR'S MORTGAGE CHARGE OF £110.00 APPLICATION FEE OF £25.00 (AVAILABLE ON COMPLETION) AND CLOSURE FEE FROM THE CASHBACK. THESE PRODUCTIONS CHARGE £20.00 AND £20.00 PER OPTION AND SEALING CHARGE. 1.5% INTEREST DISCOUNT UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. CAN BE INTEREST ONLY LOAN FOR 25 YEARS ON A PROPERTY VALUED AT £50,000 AT AN INTEREST RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) WITH THE FIRST MONTHLY PAYMENT OF £100.00 IN MONTHLY PAYMENTS. THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.5% AND THE DISCOUNTED RATE OF 5.2% (ALONG WITH THE £6,000 CASHBACK) ONLY APPLIES UNTIL 1 JULY 1998. TOTAL AMOUNT PAYABLE (£10,125.25). THE 3% DISCOUNT IS BASED ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS NET OF 1.5% RELAY CHARGE. ON THE ABOVE EXAMPLE AT OUR BASIC VARIABLE RATE OF 7.

Schools may pay £1 per pupil for access to Internet

September start is planned, Christine Buckley reports

SCHOOLS could get unlimited use of the Internet for as little as £1 per pupil per year under plans drawn up by the Director-General of Telecommunications Don Cruickshank, the industry regulator, yesterday set out a pricing scheme for schools that reduces by 80 per cent the cost of access to ordinary customers.

The regime, which would mean a charge of £665 per school per year, means much cheaper telephone calls to the Internet than BT had originally outlined. Based on an average secondary school, pupils will be able to use the Internet for £1 a year each.

In May, in a submission to the regulator which was rejected because it offered BT-only access to the Net, the company had offered charges of £790 per school based on three hours use per day for 15 computers. The company had said it could not offer lower charges because of prices it had to pay other telephone line operators to transfer calls to Internet service providers.

After talking to other companies over interconnection costs, Mr Cruickshank believes that all parties in the industry are willing to play their part to deliver cheap services to schools.

The new pricing level, which goes out to industry for consultation, means BT and cable companies are unlikely to earn cash from serving schools but they will be enticed to provide the service by the prospect of catching technology users at a young age. They will also wire up the schools free of charge.

Mr Cruickshank said he hoped pricing and other arrangements would be sealed soon to allow nationwide access early in the next academic year.

Linking the UK's 30,000 schools to the Internet has been led by Tony Blair, who made it a pledge when Labour was in opposition. Yesterday, Margaret Beckett, President of the Board of Trade, said: "The plan to have agreement in the coming academic year is testimony to the commitment that all the interested parties have in achieving the Government's objectives."

David Blunkett, the Education and Employment Secretary, said he welcomed the proposals. "In our White Paper, Excellence for Schools, we reaffirmed our commitment to create a National Grid for Learning, an unprecedented Internet-based educational resource."

BT said that it was considering the pricing proposals. The Cable Communications Association, which supported the regulator's move, said: "BT may provide the physical link to the great majority of schools, but most Internet and other on-line services are provided by the rest of the telecommunications industry, not BT. It is therefore vital that the industry as a whole participates."

Next on the agenda for the telecommunications regulator will be prices for Internet access for colleges of further education. Future plans will involve libraries and public buildings such as hospitals.

Kiosk gives the jobless a link into cyberspace

By RUSSELL JENKINS

AN "Internet Kiosk" was opened yesterday to give those who cannot afford a computer a gateway into cyberspace.

The touch screen booth, housed in a community centre in Hulme, central Manchester, is the first of six to be set up across the city for the "technologically disadvantaged", and is part of an EU-funded pilot project. The jobless and homeless will be able to surf the Internet for jobs, information about benefits and community news. They can also e-mail potential employers.

Kiosks will be installed in an Asda superstore, public libraries, a neighbourhood office and an office of the magazine The Big Issue.

The project is the first fruit of a public and private partnership between the information technology service group Sema, the electronics company NEC, Manchester City Council and Internet services company VirginNet. Vin Summer, Sema's business development director, said:

"More and more people are starting to benefit from the information society but a gap is starting to appear between the haves and have-nots."

The kiosk, called Magic Touch, was opened by the former Manchester United and England footballer Sir Bobby Charlton at the Kash Locke Centre in Hulme.

Tony Wilson, a Granada television presenter, said that it was fitting that the first free-access computer should be launched in Manchester where the computer was born nearly 50 years ago. The technological revolution, he said, should not be barred to people who could not afford to buy their own computer.

Its organisers were claiming that the casual user would be able to search on-line for employment databases, benefit entitlements, newspapers and news about events in Manchester. Users will be able to register using an alias and, for at least the first six months, send and receive their own confidential e-mail account.

Dog's life: a Scottie takes to the catwalk at Harrods yesterday in a tartan outfit. Clothes for dogs under the Barking Mad label cover formal wear, evening attire, rainproofs and party frocks. Prices start from £89.95

Souvenir seller who joined drug ring is jailed

By A STAFF REPORTER

A MONEY courier in a £37 million cocaine smuggling scheme was jailed for seven years yesterday. Thomas Hutton, 52, was described at Bristol Crown Court as a foot-soldier rather than an officer in the drugs operation.

Hutton, who at one time ran a souvenir stall in Oxford Street, London, was assessed by Judge John Foley as benefiting from his drug dealings by £1 million. He was ordered to hand over assets of £91,867 within 12 months or serve up to two more years in jail. Hutton, who lived in Medellin, Colombia, admitted one charge of conspiracy and two of money-laundering.

They arose after Customs and Excise officers infiltrated the laundering operation and later boarded the catamaran Frugal as it put into Pevensey Bay, East Sussex, on a January night in 1995 with a cargo of Colombian cocaine with a street value of £37 million.

Hutton met his wife Miriam at his souvenir stall when she was a tourist. He followed her to Colombia, where they married.

They later moved to Miami, where he became involved with her Colombian friends and became a courier for drugs money. He served five years in Los Angeles for interstate money-laundering.

Yesterday Michael Parry, QC, for the prosecution, said that Hutton returned to Britain in 1994 to contact Brian Doran, 52, of South Kensington, and Kenneth Togher, 33, of West Bromwich. They were leading organisers of the Pevensey Bay drugs run and will be sentenced on Monday for their part in that and other drugs operations.

Alex Carille, QC, representing Hutton, said that he had drifted into crime. His father was an author on anti-Soviet espionage and "lived very much in a cloak-and-dagger world". Hutton "was a foot-soldier rather than a manager" in the drugs operation.

The trials follow an undercover customs operation which broke a £65 million international drugs ring and led to 44 arrests.

Call for new gambling laws

By RICHARD FORD, HOME CORRESPONDENT

A FAR-REACHING review of the gaming laws was demanded yesterday to control the development of gambling on the Internet and proposals for televised bingo in pubs and supermarkets.

The Gaming Board said the Internet would bring hard gambling into the home, with no restrictions on credit or the involvement of children.

The board also expressed alarm at plans by Camelot and a rival firm to introduce Keno, a lottery-style game popular in the United States and the Far East. It said this type of gambling should take place only in licensed premises that excluded people under 18.

The board's annual report, published yesterday, said: "Large-scale and hard gambling activities could become available in people's homes with no proper control over such matters as gambling on credit or by children. The potential also arises for criminal involvement in organising the gaming and for its use for money laundering and other criminal purposes."

Proposals for Keno in Britain have been put forward by Camelot, the National Lottery operator, and Inter Lotto. Critics complain that the highly popular game is addictive because it can be played every five minutes. Players choose how many numbers they hope to match, with winnings rising accordingly.

The annual report says: "The board has made clear its unease about repetitive, frequent games. Pubs and clubs were never intended to be used for hard gambling."

The report urges ministers to set up an independent review of the 1968 Gaming Act and of the consequences of greater opportunities to gamble for the industry and the public. "Concern about problem and addictive gambling is growing, as gambling opportunities grow. There is the prospect of devolution, which will raise inevitable questions about where responsibility for gambling legislation in Scotland and Wales should rest. The questions of unregulated gambling on the Internet, ships and aircraft, and the possible effects of interactive television need to be addressed," the report says.

Blind student triumphs at Oxford

By KATELYN KNIGHT

A BLIND student who had been advised to give up any thoughts of an academic career was awarded a first-class degree from Oxford University yesterday.

Ben Merrick, 23, has a rare hereditary disease that struck in his late teens, reducing his vision to a blur. He defied his doctor to study French and Latin at Exeter College for four years using audio books and a voice-operated computer. He hopes to work for the Home Office or the Ministry of Defence.

Mr Merrick, of Great Missenden, Buckinghamshire, said that his vision began to fail during his year off after leaving school. "I remember a doctor in London telling me that I might as well give up because I would never get through a degree," he said. "I would say to anyone, you should just go for it. I have always viewed it as a practical problem rather than a major drawback."

He praised the staff of the Oxford Recording Centre for the Blind, based at the university's Bodleian Library, who tape-recorded hundreds of books and passages for him. "Without them, I couldn't have done anything," he said.

The secret
they couldn't cover up.

THE FAMILY INSTITUTE
FRANK DE

They continued to deny the existence of The Family Institute - a brutal experiment conducted by the Nazis. This powerful, psychological thriller reveals the secrets of the violent events that surround the few survivors.

"Elegantly written and compellingly plotted", Sunday Times.
"Brilliant, stylish, intellectual...and violent", Len Deighton.

— HarperCollinsPublishers

PEOPLES
P H O N E

Britain's Biggest Specialist
Best digital deal in Britain

FREE ACCESSORIES
FREE leather case & FREE in-car power charger worth £35.00

FREE CALLS
15 minutes free every month - forever

PER SECOND BILLING
with VODAFONE®

ALL THESE DIGITAL PHONES
FOR ONLY £9.99
EACH
(inc VAT)

180 stores nationwide to place an order or for your nearest store
call free 0800 10 11 12

Offer is subject to status, availability and connection to a Vodafone GSM tariff at £35.00 inc VAT on a new number to a new standard airtime contract. Offer is not available in conjunction with any other offers. Offer ends 31st July 1997.

As they were and as they are: back row, from left, Tony Blackburn, Jimmy Young, Robin Scott, Duncan Johnson (crouching), Dave Cash, Pete Brady; middle row, Bob Holness, Terry Wogan, Keith Skues, Chris Denning, Pete Myers; front row, Pete Murray, Ed Stewart, Pete Drummond, Mike Ahern, and John Peel. Kenny Everett, Barry Aldiss and Mike Raven, who were in the original picture, have died

Long-playing DJs sing praises of 30 years of Radio 1

FACES and voices from 30 years of radio history were reunited yesterday as Terry Wogan rubbed shoulders again with Jimmy Young, Ed "Stewpot" Stewart and Tony Blackburn. The faces are older and voices mellower but the 16 men who took BBC Radio 1 into the nation's heart are more enthusiastic about their trade than ever. When Tony Blackburn at the age of 24 picked up the microphone to open his Breakfast Show on September 30, 1967, he was heard by 19 million listeners — an overwhelming audience in today's multi-station world. He spoke to a nation worried about the "pound in your pocket" phrase of Harold Wilson, the Prime Minister.

and fascinated by Twiggy in Mary Quant's clothes. Now Blackburn is still playing the same music to a different audience on his Capital Gold Breakfast Show. He said yesterday: "This morning I played Flowers in the Rain, by The Move, which was a big hit in 1967. It was the song I opened Radio 1 with 30 years ago." For the 15 young men and Robin Scott, then Controller of Radio 1 and 2, the station was a stepping stone to success. "It was the best thing that could happen to anyone. It was tremendous," Blackburn said. "It was the only thing I wanted to do then and I still love it. I'm still doing discos now." Meeting the old familiar faces has also given

Blackburn's morale a big boost. He joked: "I'm the only one who hasn't aged." The DJs who lined up on the steps of All Souls' Church outside BBC Broadcasting House were: Mike Ahern, Tony Blackburn, Pete Brady, Dave Cash, Chris Denning, Pete Drummond, Bob Holness, Duncan Johnson, Pete Murray, Pete Myers, John Peel, Keith Skues, Ed Stewart, Terry Wogan and Jimmy Young. Robin Scott was also there. Three others from the original picture, Kenny Everett, Barry Aldiss and Mike Raven, have died. BBC1 will broadcast a 50-minute documentary, The Radio One Story, this autumn to commemorate the station's 30 years.

"You can save £50 on this Electric Shower."

B&Q SALE

SUSAN GUSH, Sales Adviser, B&Q HALIFAX

B&Q Nature's Whites Vinyl Matt or Silk Emulsion Various shades. 2.5 litres.

SAVE £7.99

WAS £14.99

£7.99

5 litres

WAS £16.49

£14.99

Crown Non Drip Gloss Pure Brilliant White. 2.5 litres.

WAS £9.49

£7.99

Crown Pure Brilliant White. 2.5 litres.

WAS £9.49

£7.99

Crown Liquid Gloss Pure Brilliant White. 2.5 litres.

WAS £9.49

£7.99

Dulux Weathershield Exterior Gloss or Flexible Undercoat Pure Brilliant White. 2.5 litres.

WAS £19.99

£15.99

Cuprinol Garden Timbercare Rustic Brown, Rich Oak, Autumn Gold or Autumn Red. 12.5 litres.

SPECIAL PURCHASE

£12.99

Gainsborough Energy 2000X Electric Shower 9.5kW.

WAS £149

£99

SAVE £50

Also available Gainsborough Energy 2000K Electric Shower 10.8kW. (Not shown).

WAS £179

£119

SAVE £60

A1 Burglar Alarm System with Cordless Detectors RF8000C With control panel, 2 passive infra-red detectors, 1 external siren unit and fittings.

WAS £129.99

£99.99

SAVE £30

Soccer 30ins Ceiling Fan With Football Globe Light Available in red/white, blue/white and black/white. Single light fitting. 60 watts.

SPECIAL PURCHASE

£29.99

Abnu Ladder Stairmaster DIY extending ladder. 3.40m extends to 6.10m.

WAS £54.99

£49.99

SAVE £5

Springtime Vinyl Wallcoverings by Vynura Available in various designs and colourways. 10m.

WAS £5.99

£5.49

SAVE £0.50

Co-ordinating Borders 5m.

WAS £3.99

£3.49

SAVE £0.50

Homeark Fan Pack Includes fan oven, standard hood and electric hob. Available in brown or white.

WAS £334.99

£279

SAVE £55

Classic Victorian Glass Bath Screen With gold effect half frame.

WAS £89.99

£59.99

SAVE £30

Gainsborough Style 300X Electric Shower 7.2kW.

WAS £89.99

£69.99

SAVE £20

Wilkinson Sword Foldaway Pruner and Knife

WAS £15.99

£9.99

SAVE £6

Phostrogen Easy Feeder Hose End Contains 250g of plant food and hose connector.

WAS £7.99

£5.99

SAVE £2

Char-Broil CB 50 Gas Barbecue Steel body and legs, single stainless steel burner. Heavy duty plastic base.

WAS £59

£54

SAVE £5

Valor Sunfire Radiant Gas Fire

WAS £229.99

£139.99

SAVE £90

Also available Valor Grampian Brass High Efficiency Gas Fire (Not shown).

WAS £229.99

£199.99

SAVE £30

Guincoast Hedge Master 421 360 watts, 42cm cutting length. Dual action steel blades. 4.3kg and 12m cable.

WAS £59.50

£54.50

SAVE £5

EARN TESCO CLUBCARD POINTS AT B&Q

Ask in store for details. Does not apply in B&Q Warehouse or B&Q Depots.

OPENING HOURS

Monday-Saturday: Most stores 9am-5pm. Sunday: Most stores 10am-4pm. (Some stores may vary, please phone your nearest store to confirm.)

BRITAIN'S BIGGEST DIY CHAIN - FOR YOUR NEAREST STORE PHONE 0800 400 000

B&Q

YOU CAN DO IT WHEN YOU B&Q IT!

Social service budget cuts hit elderly

BY ALEXANDRA FREAN, SOCIAL AFFAIRS CORRESPONDENT

ELDERLY people are bearing the brunt of cuts in local authority social services budgets as places in nursing homes are reduced and new charges introduced for essential home care, according to a report published yesterday.

The study by the Association of Directors of Social Services found that the cuts, which amount to £214 million a year or £2.5 million per authority, were increasing the workload of managers and staff by forcing them constantly to find new ways of coping within ever-tightening financial constraints. "The picture is a depressing and daunting one, with social services authorities across the country having to find reductions in their budget at a time of rising need," it concluded.

The report found that the vast majority of the 140 councils in England and Wales that it surveyed were seeking to protect child care services, which meant that the pressure was increasingly falling on services for adults, particularly those for elderly people.

Most of the authorities questioned had introduced stricter criteria for access to services, such as home care and nearly 40 per cent had introduced new charges for services that were previously free. Between them, they had withdrawn 2,280 places in nursing and care homes, an average of 28 places per authority.

Of particular concern to the association was the discovery that a few authorities were placing elderly people in residential care rather than supporting them in the community if the latter was more costly.

Given the demographic trends towards an ageing population, the association is concerned that spending and lack of investment in homes for the elderly could lead to a shortage of places.

The cuts represented about 4 per cent of the social services budgets, at a time of growing demand and tougher targets for quality, the study said. Authorities were seeking to generate additional funding, develop new ways of working, re-align their investments and improve their efficiency, but had an uphill struggle. "There is deep concern at the effects on the more vulnerable; and frustration that the good track record of services in introducing care in the community and new children's services is being undermined by budget constraints," it concluded.

Authorities are seeking to save money by changing conditions of service for staff and replacing highly-trained workers with less qualified and lower paid staff. Grants to voluntary organisations are being frozen.

PRAGUE

£169

10 Day Holiday with B&Q Good Hotel

New Millennium Holidays

Brochure: 0121 711 4517

BASE RATE

With effect from

10 July 1997

The Royal Bank of Scotland

Base Rate has been increased from 6.50% to 6.75% per annum.

The Royal Bank of Scotland

The Royal Bank of Scotland plc.
Registered Office: 36 St. Andrew Square, Edinburgh EH2 2YB.
Registered in Scotland No. 90312.

هكذا منه الأصل

Andrews had 'motive for marriage, not murder'

By JOANNA BALE

TRACIE ANDREWS is not a monster but a person wrongly accused of an horrendous crime, a court was told yesterday.

Miss Andrews, who is charged with the roadside murder of her fiancé Lee Harvey, had no motive for murder but a motive for marriage. She loved Mr Harvey and wanted to spend the rest of her life with him, Ronald Thwaites, QC, for the defence, said.

Mr Thwaites urged the jury to approach the case with an open mind. He criticised what he called prejudicial press coverage of the case, saying: "You may know of, or live with, one of the army of armchair detectives who pointed to Miss Andrews when she appeared on the television screen, and knowing nothing of her other than her bruised blonde looks, said, 'If you ask me, I bet she did it'. And when days later she was arrested and charged with murder... all those television pundits no doubt congratulated themselves."

Mr Thwaites, opening the defence, said that Miss Andrews was to give evidence on Monday so the jury could hear her side of the story.

The prosecution say she had a motive for murder. She says no, she had a motive for marriage. This is the man she had fixed upon to spend the rest of her life with. They had found glamour with each other, charm with each other. They wanted each other. He said that the couple had twice postponed their wedding but still hoped to marry and had attended marriage guidance. "She was wearing his ring on the night he died and is wearing it still today. She was committed to him."

He said the police had prematurely abandoned investigations into her claims that Mr Harvey was stabbed by a man who was the passenger in a Ford Sierra. This followed evidence from two people in a car which passed the couple near the murder scene who alleged there was no car following them. Mr Thwaites said: "You know that almost from the moment that those two witnesses were seen, the police investigation into the Sierra stalled and came to a complete stop, never to be restarted. Within 72 hours they closed the book on her account and never reopened it."

He described Miss Andrews as a generally sensible, level-headed, practical young woman who could cope with her life as a single mother. "By contrast, Mr Harvey was a person who could not cope very well with his life."

He said Mr Harvey hated his job at a bus garage which he had given up and gone back to before being dismissed. He did not get on with his family. He also had rows over maintenance with the mother of his young daughter who had taken out an injunction against him.

Mr Thwaites said: "He bitterly resented paying maintenance which was one of the reasons why he gave up his job, so that the CSA could not get money from his employers." Mr Thwaites said that it was Mr Harvey's jealousy and insecurity that caused their frequent rows. "He was obsessive about her. He spent his time tracking Tracie." Mr Thwaites disclosed that Miss Andrews had become pregnant by Mr Harvey but decided on an abortion because they were having problems. "She wanted to have his child, but they were having problems. She did not see the relationship surviving and saw the child as a burden Lee did not welcome. She did not want to be left with two children by two men."

The termination was at 16 weeks and she immediately regretted it, Mr Thwaites said. "She was unable to tell him the truth about that until some weeks later, pretending she miscarried." As a result of the abortion, Mr Thwaites said, Miss Andrews lost her figure and bust and Mr Harvey made unkind remarks which she found deeply hurtful. He later apologised and paid for breast implants.

Miss Andrews denies murder. The case continues.

The scene on the M11 near Harlow yesterday after undercover police foiled a planned armed raid on a security van in Norwich. Four miles of the carriageway were closed

Armed gang arrested on motorway

By STEWART TENDLER
CRIME CORRESPONDENT

FOUR suspected armed robbers were arrested by police on the M11 yesterday after an undercover operation halted an attempt to rob a security van. A southbound section of the motorway between junctions 6 and 7 was closed for nearly three hours after three cars and a van were stopped by a team of nearly 100 officers from Scotland Yard and Norfolk police.

Police found four handguns and ammunition, but no shots were fired and no one was injured.

The four suspects were under surveillance as they left London yesterday and headed for Norwich in four stolen vehicles. They reached the target area still under observation but decided not to carry out the raid. Last night police would not say how the robbery had been disrupted but police may have asked for the van's deliveries to be cancelled or the vehicle took a different route.

The suspects then began driving back to London in convoy, followed by police in unmarked cars. They drove onto the A11 and then joined the motorway south of Cambridge. Armed officers and police helicopters moved in when they reached a stretch of the motorway close to the junction with the M25. Tailbacks of up to ten miles built up during the closure of a four-mile stretch of motorway south from Harlow. Last night the four suspects faced questioning about plans to rob the van in Norwich and other robberies in the London area. All four are middle-aged and come from the London area.

There's an institution in America for people who are crazy about cars.

It's called Chrysler.

Hundreds of nuts are involved in the production of every Chrysler car. And only a small proportion of them are used to hold the wheels on.

We are a company run by automobile enthusiasts, not by accountants. (Though our numbers people are happy enough. Last year we sold 2.9 million cars, making us one of the largest motor manufacturers on the planet.)

Our passion is plain to see in every car. Take the Prowler, a two-door roadster with the design of a hot rod. Or the astonishing Viper, with its mighty 8 litre V10 engine reaching 0-60 mph in just 4.5 seconds. The Jeep® Grand Cherokee has set new standards in all aspects of 4x4 design. And the Chrysler Voyager is a rare creation: a people-mover that actually moves the people who drive it.

Even our more mainstream models are radically different. The Chrysler Neon features a revolutionary 'cab-forward' design. This involves positioning the windscreen further forward and moving the wheels towards the corners to increase passenger space and improve handling.

The Chrysler Neon LX also comes with a host of standard features for which you would normally expect to pay extra. Such as air-conditioning, ABS brakes, twin airbags, immobiliser, power steering and remote central locking.

And automatic transmission is available at no extra cost. Yet the cost is just £13,795 on the road. Visit your nearest Chrysler dealer and take the Neon for a test drive. We think you'll want it like mad. And after all, we should know.

THE CHRYSLER NEON LX £13,795 ON THE ROAD BUILT FOR THE MOST DEMANDING COUNTRY IN THE WORLD

MR/MRS/MS please SURNAME ADDRESS POSTCODE HOME PHONE BUSINESS PHONE FOR MORE INFORMATION, FREEPHONE 0800 616159, TELETXT PAGE 385 MT47 RECOMMENDED RETAIL PRICES OF NEON START AT £12,995. ALL PRICES ARE ON THE ROAD AND INCLUDE 12 MONTHS ROAD FUND LICENCE (£145). PRICES AND SPECIFICATIONS ARE CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS. FOR LITERATURE OR THE LOCATION OF YOUR NEAREST CHRYSLER DEALER SEND COUPON TO FREEPOST 1048, SANDWICH, KENT CT13 9BB.

PARAMOUNT HOTELS

Great offers for late availability - call now!

3 'MIDSUMMER NIGHTS' at Dream Prices!

WALES-CARDIFF
The Angel Hotel, Cardiff
★★★★ RAC Leisure club, city centre location
Free entry to National Museum of Wales
DB&B £36

WEST COAST
The Prince of Wales Hotel, Southport
★★★★ RAC A centre for golf
Free entry to Pleasureland
DB&B £40

THE COTSWOLDS
The Cheltenham Park Hotel
★★★★ AA/RAC Leisure club with pool
Free entry to St. Nicks Castle
DB&B £50

HEART OF CHESHIRE
Shrigley Hall Hotel, Golf & Country Club
★★★★ AA/RAC Leisure club, pool, Golf Course
Free entry to Chatsworth House
DB&B £50

PEAK DISTRICT
The Palace Hotel, Buxton
★★★★ RAC Leisure club with pool
Free entry to Chatsworth House
DB&B £40

SOUTH COAST
Norfolk Royale Hotel, Bournemouth
★★★★ AA/RAC Leisure spa complex
DB&B £55

YOUR BREAK INCLUDES

- 3 course table d'hôte dinner
- Full English/Welsh breakfast
- Free entry to local attractions
- Use of all leisure facilities
- En suite accommodation
- VAT at 17.5%
- 2 night breaks also available

Phone Free 0500 342543
Open 7 days 9.00am - 3.00pm

PRAGUE
£169

RATE

Royal Bank
Scotland

An important message to all our customers.

Saturday 12th & Sunday 13th July

We are making every effort to return to normal service this weekend following the period of industrial action.

We are happy to confirm that the following services will be operating as normal:

- All flights to and from regional airports – Birmingham, Manchester, Edinburgh & Glasgow (though some to and from London Heathrow may be affected).
- All domestic & European flights to and from London Gatwick.
- The following franchise & Alliance operated flights:

BA998-999	BA4600-4999	BA6800-6999	BA8000-8199	BA8700-8839
BA3000-3499	BA6200-6449	BA7400-7499	BA8200-8299	BA8840-8899
BA4000-4199	BA6700-6749	BA7600-7949	BA8300-8450

- All intercontinental flights to and from London Heathrow and London Gatwick except those listed below:

London Heathrow		London Gatwick
Kuala Lumpur & Jakarta	BA33/BA34	Dubai & Colombo	BA2137/BA2136
Cairo	BA155/BA154	New York (JFK)	BA2173/BA2172
New York (Newark)	BA185/BA184	Baku	BA2029/BA2028
New York (JFK)	BA113/BA116
	BA117/BA112
Boston	BA239/BA238
Cape Town	BA59/BA58
Jeddah	BA133/BA132
Larnaca & Tehran	BA103/BA102
Seoul	BA41/BA42
Nagoya	BA21/BA22
Montreal	BA95/BA94
Detroit	BA97/BA96
Madras	BA35/BA36
Dhahran	BA129/BA128
Kuwait	BA157/BA156
Dubai	BA127/BA126
Peking	BA39/BA38

Domestic and European flights to and from London Heathrow

Whilst we are making every endeavour to operate as many services as possible, we regret that some flights remain subject to disruption as we return aircraft to their normal operating positions.

For further details of flights operating this weekend and early next week, either:

1. contact your travel agent or British Airways Travel Shop
2. look on ITV Teletext p.380 & p.381
3. visit our website at www.british-airways.com/strike
4. or call our information line 0800 727 800.

Again, we would like to offer our sincerest apologies to any customers who are being inconvenienced by the industrial action. Rest assured that we are continuing to do all we can to keep disruption to a minimum. If your flight is affected, we will endeavour to organise alternative travel arrangements for you to reach your destination.

BRITISH AIRWAYS

Parents foot the bill as student debt rises by 25%

By JOHN O'LEARY, EDUCATION EDITOR

PARENTS are picking up a growing share of the bill for their children's higher education even before the Government's expected addition of £1,000 a year in tuition fees, according to a bank survey published today.

Annual research on students' finances by Barclays Bank shows that average debts have risen by a quarter in a single year. Almost nine out of ten students expect to owe money when they graduate, the average amount rising from less than £2,000 last year to almost £2,500.

With state support dwindling, parents are paying more than £400 million a year to help their children, on top of means-tested contributions to student grants. Three quarters of students said they received some money from their parents and for more than one in three they were the main source of income.

CASE HISTORY

Loan heads for £4,000 despite aid from home

EVEN with debts of more than £3,000 and another year at university to come, Vicky Askew is grateful that she is a student now (John O'Leary writes). Paying tuition fees would have ruled her out of higher education.

The 22-year-old public relations student knew when she entered Bournemouth University that she was likely to go into the red: "Debt is part of being a student nowadays."

With no grant, she has had to rely on parents with debts of their own. Both she and her sister, Madeleine, are students, so the burden on the family after an expensive job-related move south is considerable. "I really don't like having to sponge off my parents," Vicky said. "There is no way I could have gone to university if it meant fees of £1,000 a year."

She has found Bournemouth expensive, with rent £10 a week higher than her sister pays in Northampton. After two years, she had borrowed £2,400 from the Student Loans Company and had a bank overdraft of £750.

For the past year, she has been on a work placement at the Institute of Internal Auditors, London, earning £8,000. But the capital's cost of living prevented her from reducing her overdraft. She hopes that will begin next month when she starts a summer job in a meat-packing factory near her home in Suffolk.

When she graduates in a year, she hopes to have only her student loan to repay. But that will be more than £4,000. "It will take a few years to pay off. I know people who are still paying five years after they graduated."

ents and for more than one in three they were the main source of income.

The finding comes less than a fortnight before Sir Ron Dearing is expected to recommend that students should pay fees of £1,000 a year or more, as well as meeting their own living costs. Ministers are likely to adopt the proposals to avert a funding crisis in universities and colleges.

However, today's report and a string of others illustrating student hardship will add to the pressure from student organisations and Labour MPs to preserve free full-time higher education. The National Union of Students said the figures showed that student debt was already restricting access for those from poorer families.

An NUS spokesman said: "It shows that students are simply not coping with the levels of debt they are being forced into at the moment — unless they have parents who can afford to help them. There is no doubt that asking students to repay tuition fees as well would deter large numbers from trying to get into higher education at all."

The Barclays survey shows that as students' maintenance grants have been cut, to be increasingly replaced by loans, reliance on parental support has grown. The average contribution is £631 this year, while other parents provided free food, help with travelling, or even the use of a car.

At the same time, the proportion of students saying they owed money to their parents halved, from 34 per cent to 17 per cent, suggesting that more parents were not expecting their children to repay them.

Fewer than 30 per cent of students now regard their local education authority maintenance grant as their main source of income. Two thirds now owe money to the Student Loans Company, with an average debt of £1,724.

In spite of their worsening financial position, fewer students were working during their summer holidays. However, more than 80 per cent intended to do so and 30 per cent had a term-time job.

Students themselves were saving more before going to college, aware of the financial burden they would face. This year, 58 per cent of first-year students went to college with savings averaging £1,137.

As awareness of debt rises, students are getting more resigned to it, the survey shows. Only 21 per cent were "worried, angry or concerned" about their debts, compared with 30 per cent last year.

The survey calculated average living costs for students in London and Manchester. After combined maximum grant and loan, the shortfall for students in London ranged from £1,630 for a first-year living in a hall of residence to £3,428 for a third-year renting a house with three others. In Manchester, where the maximum loan is lower, the equivalent figures were £1,755 and £3,605.

Malaysian Tom Cruise finds role at Newcastle

By PAUL WILKINSON

SOUTH-EAST ASIA'S answer to Tom Cruise was yesterday completing the first steps in his other career, picking up an honours degree in architecture at an English university.

Back home Azhar Sulaiman has an estimated 80 million female fans, but for the last three years the Malaysian film star has mingled anonymously in the students' union bar at Newcastle University. Even the sight last winter of a television crew spending three months in the city making a soap opera of his fictional exploits as a Malaysian student abroad failed to stir much interest on Tyneside.

It was only when the hero of a string of romantic dramas visited the university stand at an exhibition in Kuala Lumpur that tutors realised his status. Terry McCarthy, director of Newcastle's international office, was amazed to see him mobbed by screaming teenagers.

He then learned that Mr Sulaiman broke the hearts of thousands of girls across South-East Asia three years ago when, at the age of 22, he suspended his film career after ten blockbusters to take his degree. However, their interest was kept up with 40 episodes of the soap opera Cinta Antara Benua, or Love Across the Continents, the adventures of Zack the overseas student. The series is shown in Malaysia, Singapore, Brunei and Indonesia.

The star: he appeared in ten films

Mr Sulaiman, who lives with his wife Chempaka, 26, in Gosforth, and hopes to combine the two careers, said: "I suppose my roles equate to a Hollywood star like Tom Cruise. I told people that I had done some acting, but no one realised quite how well known I was. It was nice to be able to just mix with the crowd. I saw no reason to make a big fuss."

The graduate: Mr Sulaiman after receiving his architecture degree

THE SUNDAY TIMES THE TEMPEST

"They were 'racing the latitudes to change attitudes' towards disability. However, as they approach Britain at the end of the round the world race, a more complex story is emerging. Disability is certainly no bar to tenacity, endurance and courage. Nor is it a bar to rows, tears, terror or defection."

The truth about the disabled crew racing round the world. In News Review tomorrow

THE SUNDAY TIMES
IS THE SUNDAY PAPERS

"MY DAD'S CAR IS BETTER THAN YOUR DAD'S CAR!"*

(IT'S OFFICIAL, BBC TOP GEAR MAGAZINE VOTED THE FIAT BRAVA FAMILY CAR OF THE YEAR.)

Because you want your kids to enjoy the best of everything, you really must take a look at the Fiat Brava. After all, BBC Top Gear magazine rate it this year's best family car. That's partly because the Brava doesn't look like a family car. (Put a cardboard box next to the photo above. See, no resemblance whatsoever.) And in this case appearances are not deceptive. The Brava is also stylish and carefully designed on the inside. Of course, careful design means safe design. The Brava ELX features a driver's airbag, ABS and remote control central locking. And for convenience, electric door mirrors, windows and sun-roof. The thoughtful inclusion of a 6 speaker CD compatible radio-cassette means you can drown the sound of noisy offspring with a tweak of the volume button. And because Top Gear won't be the only ones to covet the Fiat Brava ELX, the car is fitted with an alarm and a Fiat CODE immobiliser. It means that only you and your sprogs can enjoy the refined 1.6 or sporty 1.8 engines. (Alternatively, you could plumb for the 1.9 turbo diesel if you want to save money fast.) 1997's Top Family Car can be yours from just £11,070, on the road. All Bravas are also available with Fiat's Flexible Easiplan*, which offers a host of unique ways to drive a new Fiat. So what family car will get your vote? The one that's better than your kid's friend's dad's car, of course. Call 0800 71 7000, <http://www.fiat.co.uk> or visit your local Fiat dealer for more information.

0%
3 YEARS

	BRAVA 1.4S	BRAVA 1.8ELX (Metallic)		BRAVA 1.4S	BRAVA 1.8ELX (Metallic)
Cash Price† (on the road)	£11,070.13	£14,898.28	36 Monthly Payments	£153.00	£206.00
Deposit	£5,562.13	£7,452.28	APR	0%	0%
Amount Financed	£5,508.00	£7,416.00	Total Amount Payable	£11,070.13	£14,898.28

FIAT BRAVA

CAR SHOWN FIAT BRAVA 1.8ELX AT £14,898 ON THE ROAD (WITH METALLIC PAINT). *PRICE INCLUDES £25% FOR DELIVERY TO DEALER, NUMBER PLATE, VAT AND 12 MONTHS ROAD FUND LICENCE AND IS CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS 27.07.97. FINANCE OFFER ENDS 31.07.97. THE FINANCE OFFER REQUIRES A MINIMUM DEPOSIT 50% OF CASH PRICE. *FLEXIBLE EASIPLAN SUBJECT TO MINIMUM DEPOSIT OF 10%. CREDIT FACILITIES OFFERED ARE AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED 18 AND OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS. A GUARANTEE AND OR INSURANCE MAY BE REQUIRED. WRITTEN QUOTATIONS AVAILABLE ON REQUEST FROM FIAT AUTO FINANCIAL SERVICES LIMITED, PO BOX 17004, EDINBURGH EH11 5YW. TO ORDER AN INTERNET CONNECTION (SUBJECT TO AVAILABILITY) TO VIEW THE INTERNET SITE CALL 0800 71 7000.

DRIVEN BY PASSION FIAT

The help key.

The unique Navi™ Key on the new Nokia 3110 is the most helpful button on any mobile. Call, send, save, edit, memory. One key does everything. Call 0990 003110 for a leaflet. Or help yourself to a demo at your retailer's.

NOKIA
CONNECTING PEOPLE

3110. A TOUCH SIMPLER.

A part of medical history will be preserved forever reports Damian Whitworth

A SMUDGE of mould nearly 70 years old was sold at auction yesterday. This was no common bathroom growth but a sample from the original culture in which Sir Alexander Fleming discovered penicillin in 1928. It fetched £14,950 in a lot with a photograph of Fleming in his laboratory and a medal commemorating the discovery.

The specimen, preserved under glass in a wooden box, was bought by the Science Museum in London and is to be displayed in an exhibition about penicillin. The museum had been prepared to pay more because of the specimen's importance to the history of medicine. "Fleming was the forefather of antibiotics and chemotherapy," a spokesman said.

The sample was given by Fleming to Douglas MacLeod, a gynaecologist colleague at St Mary's Hospital, Paddington. The men had been discussing developments in bacteriology and the constant struggle to ward off infections in the hospital canteen.

Fleming praised a new drug but then turned to his companion and said: "You know, Mac, I've got something much better — but no one will listen to me and I can't get anyone interested."

Dr MacLeod, nicknamed "The Highlander" by Fleming, later told a biographer: "I asked him what the substance was called. He said he had given it the name penicillin. He asked me to go with him to his laboratory. He showed me the mould and gave me a specimen."

Dr MacLeod kept the unusual gift until his death in 1970. It was sold at Christie's by his son, Rory MacLeod, 62, who said at his home near Wincanton, Somerset: "I'm delighted at the result. Fleming wasn't the best man to promote himself or his work, being a rather shy chap."

Nobody would take any notice of him. But when he offered my father a sample, he accepted it and always kept it."

Fleming, born in Ayrshire in 1881, spent most of his career investigating the body's defences against bacterial infection but it was only late in life that he received retrospective fame for discovering penicillin in 1928. The breakthrough came when he noticed that mould which had contaminated a bacterial culture had destroyed the bacteria in its vicinity. He identified the mould as Penicillium notatum and named the antibacterial substance penicillin.

Although Fleming could not isolate or identify the antibiotic, he never lost confidence that penicillin would be stabilised and purified and rejoiced when Ernst Chain and Howard Florey accomplished this at Oxford 11 years later.

Manufacture was given top priority to cope with mounting war casualties and, as its efficacy became more widely known, Fleming was showered with honours. He died in 1955 and is buried in St Paul's Cathedral.

BY JOHN SHAW

A REPLICA of the World Cup sold for £254,500 yesterday at Sotheby's in London, well beyond the estimate of £30,000. It was bought anonymously.

The gilt-bronze copy of the gold original was passed off as the real thing for two years before it was won by Brazil in 1970. The 13-in-high Jules Rimet trophy was stolen while on show at Central Hall, Westminster, in March 1966.

A few days after the theft Football Association officials commissioned a replica from Alexander Clarke, a firm of City silversmiths. But while preparatory work was going ahead the cup was found by a dog in bushes in south London. Four months later Bobby Moore held the cup aloft after England's win over Germany at Wembley.

It prompted worldwide demand to see the gold trophy kept in the jeweller's strong-room in Fenchurch Street. It was brought out up to ten times a week for official functions at Buckingham Palace, Downing Street, and at government departments.

Security was becoming a problem and to avoid a second theft it was decided that a replica should be made in

NET AMOUNT DUE TO DEBTOR: $2,500.00 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $250.00) = $2,250.00
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $2,250.00 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $225.00) = $1,925.00
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1,925.00 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $192.50) = $1,732.50
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1,732.50 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $173.25) = $1,559.25
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1,559.25 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $155.93) = $1,403.32
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1,403.32 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $140.33) = $1,262.99
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1,262.99 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $126.30) = $1,136.69
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1,136.69 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $113.67) = $1,023.02
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1,023.02 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $102.30) = $920.72
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $920.72 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $92.07) = $828.65
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $828.65 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $82.87) = $745.78
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $745.78 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $74.58) = $671.20
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $671.20 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $67.12) = $604.08
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $604.08 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $60.41) = $543.67
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $543.67 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $54.37) = $489.30
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $489.30 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $48.93) = $440.37
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $440.37 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $44.04) = $396.33
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $396.33 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $39.63) = $356.70
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $356.70 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $35.67) = $321.03
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $321.03 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $32.10) = $288.93
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $288.93 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $28.89) = $260.04
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $260.04 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $26.00) = $234.04
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $234.04 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $23.40) = $210.64
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $210.64 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $21.06) = $189.58
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $189.58 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $18.96) = $170.62
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $170.62 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $17.06) = $153.56
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $153.56 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $15.36) = $138.20
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $138.20 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $13.82) = $124.38
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $124.38 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $12.44) = $111.94
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $111.94 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $11.19) = $100.75
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $100.75 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $10.07) = $90.68
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $90.68 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $9.07) = $81.61
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $81.61 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $8.16) = $73.45
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $73.45 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $7.35) = $66.10
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $66.10 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $6.61) = $59.49
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $59.49 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $5.95) = $53.54
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $53.54 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $5.35) = $48.19
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $48.19 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $4.82) = $43.37
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $43.37 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $4.33) = $39.04
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $39.04 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $3.90) = $35.14
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $35.14 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $3.51) = $31.63
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $31.63 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $3.16) = $28.47
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $28.47 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $2.85) = $25.62
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $25.62 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $2.56) = $23.06
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $23.06 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $2.31) = $20.75
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $20.75 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $2.07) = $18.68
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $18.68 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $1.87) = $16.81
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $16.81 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $1.68) = $15.13
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $15.13 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $1.51) = $13.62
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $13.62 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $1.36) = $12.26
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $12.26 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $1.23) = $11.03
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $11.03 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $1.10) = $9.93
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $9.93 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.99) = $8.94
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $8.94 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.89) = $8.05
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $8.05 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.80) = $7.25
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $7.25 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.72) = $6.53
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $6.53 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.65) = $5.88
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $5.88 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.59) = $5.29
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $5.29 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.53) = $4.76
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $4.76 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.48) = $4.28
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $4.28 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.43) = $3.85
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $3.85 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.38) = $3.47
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $3.47 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.35) = $3.12
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $3.12 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.31) = $2.81
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $2.81 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.28) = $2.53
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $2.53 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.25) = $2.28
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $2.28 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.23) = $2.05
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $2.05 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.20) = $1.85
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1.85 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.18) = $1.67
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1.67 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.16) = $1.50
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1.50 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.15) = $1.35
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1.35 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.13) = $1.22
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1.22 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.12) = $1.10
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $1.10 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.11) = $0.99
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.99 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.09) = $0.89
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.89 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.08) = $0.80
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.80 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.07) = $0.72
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.72 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.06) = $0.65
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.65 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.05) = $0.59
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.59 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.05) = $0.53
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.53 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.04) = $0.48
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.48 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.04) = $0.43
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.43 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.03) = $0.38
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.38 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.03) = $0.35
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.35 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.03) = $0.31
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.31 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.02) = $0.28
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.28 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.02) = $0.25
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.25 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.02) = $0.23
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.23 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.02) = $0.20
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.20 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.18
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.18 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.16
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.16 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.15
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.15 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.13
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.13 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.12
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.12 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.11
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.11 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.10
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.10 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.01) = $0.09
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.09 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.00) = $0.08
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.08 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.00) = $0.07
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.07 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.00) = $0.06
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.06 (LESS 10% DISCOUNT OF $0.00) = $0.05
 TOTAL DUE TO DEBTOR: $0.05 (LESS

هذه امة الاصل

Bishops 'knowingly ordain gay clergy'

By RUTH GLEDHILL
RELIGION CORRESPONDENT

MANY bishops have knowingly ordained or employed practising homosexual clergy, even though this goes against Church of England policy, a survey is expected to disclose tomorrow.

The survey, by the Lesbian and Gay Christian Movement, is being published as the General Synod prepares this weekend to debate homosexuality. Bishops and clergy, concerned that the synod is becoming obsessed with single-issue politics, are trying to minimise the impact of the debate.

However, their pleas are likely to go unheard by protesters expected at the synod as the battle lines are drawn for Monday's debate on a 1991 bishops' report, "Issues in Human Sexuality", which sanctioned committed relationships between the homosexuals in the laity but ruled them out for clergy.

A motion from the Archdeacon of Wadsworth, the Ven David Gerrard, will ask the synod to commend the report for discussion and acknowledge that it is not the final word on the subject. The bishops have already said that they will block any amendments to the motion. Nor do they want to alter the Church's stance, established in 1987, that homosexual genital acts should be met with a "call to repentance" and that heterosexual marriage was the ideal.

However, many bishops quietly

PROMOTION OF WOMEN PRIESTS

A motion calling for the promotion of women priests to be bishops has been tabled to the General Synod — by one of their leading opponents. The Rev Geoffrey Kirk, a traditionalist who is secretary to the Forward in Faith group, which opposes women priests in the Church of England, has put down a private member's motion this weekend calling for the consecration of women bishops "without delay". This, he says, is because the synod must recognise that women bishops "are a necessary and inevitable consequence of the ordination of women." Supporters of women priests are threatening to boycott the motion, which they say is "mischievous". The ordination of women priests was approved five years ago.

acknowledge that a cleric's sexuality need have little bearing on their ability. There are dozens of practising gay and lesbian clergy operating successful and valued ministries.

The Rev Nick Holtham, vicar of St Martin-in-the-Fields, London, said the Church must now recognise that an individual's attitude to homosexuality was not a fundamental matter of faith or core test of Christian orthodoxy. Mr Holtham, writing in yesterday's Church Times, says the most serious problem facing the bishops is that they have made it impossible for practising homosexual clergy to contribute to the debate because they are supposed not to exist. "I have been to the licensing of a priest who was known to the bishop as a homosexual living with his partner. In this service, the bishop declared that the priest was a man of 'sound morals'," he said.

"I have been to another service for a priest in which another bishop, usually identified as a traditionalist, expressed sympathy to the priest's family and particularly to the priest's same-sex partner. It is not surprising that those who are fiercely opposed to a tolerance of homosexuals within the Church distrust those bishops who appear to say one thing and do another."

The Right Rev Richard Harries, Bishop of Oxford, who chairs a working group appointed to follow up the earlier report, said it was not true to argue that the Church would never change its mind on the subject, but said that the Church was not about to do so immediately.

The United Reformed Church has decided that men and women in active homosexual relationships can become serving ministers if their local church does not object. At its assembly in Portsmouth this week, it agreed that such a relationship would not be grounds to reject a candidate for training.

At Your Service
Weekend, page 11

David Gerrard, right, in a televised debate on gay clergy yesterday

Credo

We all have a role in God's soap operas

The Bible, as we know it, hardly existed before the invention of the printing press in the 16th century. The Church did not evangelise and teach through books and pamphlets but by images, pictures, and stories told in family and community life.

Medieval mystery plays exemplified this approach to education and in the larger centres were mounted on epic scale, with sophistication and civic pride. The plays followed quite closely the biblical stories of creation and redemption, with an underlying theme of the parallel encounters of human and divine, good and evil. The initial vision of creation overflowing from the superabundance of God degenerates into a conflict which can be resolved only by God Himself as He makes His journey into the far country, to Bethlehem and Calvary.

Stories are a highly adaptable artistic form. The basic story can be re-told in fresh ways, to which a contemporary audience can readily relate. Original sin can be expressed by road rage or the lonely bustle of urban life, alongside the traditional picture of the forbidden fruit. The wise men — representing the homage of the world at large to the newborn King of the Jews — can assume modern secular guises. The shepherds can be portrayed with latter-day working class overtones.

The new cycle of Chester mystery plays brings old and new interpretations together in a creative way, in a powerful performance. The woodenness and triviality of so much presentation of the Christian faith is enlivened by the series of sermons-in-stories, which the sequential scenes of the mystery plays represent. Christianity makes a drama out of a crisis, with the Son of God as the chief actor on a human and cosmic stage. When well scripted and acted, the mystery plays bring the story alive — much as Alec McCowen did in his renowned stage performance of St Mark's Gospel. Just as he insisted upon the Authorised Version, so the best adaptations of the mystery plays retain a recognisable medieval dimension, woven together with modern themes and illustrations. Radio, television and associated media are taking us back towards the Middle Ages. Illiteracy is rising, and those who can read and write now rarely bother, or need to do so. We are entertained by that form of storytelling known as soap operas. In such a cultural context, mystery plays seem curiously avant-garde, communicating the Christian faith with freshness.

Peter Forster

Mystery plays invite the audience to become caught up in the plot as it explores the great issues of life and death. Beauty and enlightenment go hand in hand. They tackle the biggest subject there is, but in terms of day-to-day life. They are about, and encompass, you and me. By cajoling and warning, by educating and amusing, they invite us on to the stage.

□ The Right Rev Peter Forster is Bishop of Chester.

□ The Chester mystery plays will run daily on the cathedral green until Wednesday.

Drinkers get beer facts of Christian message

CHURCHMEN are turning to drink to attract new members (Paul Wilkinson writes). A travelling band of preachers are using beer mats to advertise their impending arrival.

The mats, which advertise the Through Faith Mission, are printed with passages of Scripture and Christian symbols such as the Cross. The group, based in Cambridge, is walking round Britain, talking to customers in pubs. Tim Hall, the mission spokesman, said: "The whole basis is to reach out to people beyond the church and we are targeting people in pubs. The mats seem to work quite well."

A bad credit rating isn't a crime. Most mortgage lenders just make it feel like one.

At Paragon Mortgages, we won't judge you by your county court judgements. In fact, if you can show us that you've put your financial difficulties behind you, we'll be happy to consider you for a loan of up to 80% of the property's value. And after just three years, we will reduce your rate by 3% to our competitive, standard variable rate - provided your account is in order. For further details, call 0800 375 777 quoting reference number 130.

paragon
mortgages

Call free 0800 375 777

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT.

EXCLUSIVE TO YOUR SONY CENTRE

SAVE UP TO £100

550 AIR MILES FREE

EQUALS ONE RETURN FLIGHT TO EUROPE*

WHEN YOU BUY
SELECTED SONY
HiFi SYSTEMS

MINIDISC HiFi SYSTEM - MD-T5

• MiniDisc for Digital Recording • 2x50V (RMS) • FM/AMV/LW with PDS • 3 Disc CD Changer • Auto Pause Tape Deck • Remote Control Supplied

SAVE £100 WAS £599.99 NOW £499.99 PRP*

Many more great savings in store.

PROMOTION PERIOD RUNS FROM 1st JUNE TO 26th JULY 1997. ALL AIR MILES CLAIMS TO BE RECEIVED BY 9th AUGUST 1997.

*"MiniDisc", "HiFi", "X-Forma Bass", "Sony", "Sony Centre" and "MiniDisc" are trademarks of the Sony Corporation, Japan. RRP is the recommended retail price. "PRP" is the promotional recommended retail price for the period of the promotion. All promotions are subject to availability, at participating Sony Centres only. AIR MILES and the Flying Bear logo are trademarks of AIR MILES International Holdings N.V. See claim form for full details. *From UK mainland.

PLUS
100 EXTRA MILES FREE
WHEN YOU PURCHASE ONE OF THE FEATURED PRODUCTS ABOVE. ATTACH THE COMPLETED COUPON OPPOSITE TO YOUR AIR MILES LEAFLET AVAILABLE IN STORE.

COMPLETE THE COUPON BELOW TO CLAIM YOUR EXTRA 100 MILES

Name _____
Address _____
Postcode _____
Sony Centre _____

TOT77

Sony Centre

THERE'S A SONY CENTRE NEAR YOU.

SOUTH EAST

BASINGSTOKE Tel: 01256 355777

BRIGHTON Tel: 01273 202 4748

BRIGHTON Tel: 01273 202 4748

BROMLEY Tel: 0181 480 5510

CAMBRIDGE Tel: 01223 459021

CANTERBURY Tel: 01227 459021

CHELSEA Tel: 01245 490726

CHESTER Tel: 01268 560632

CRAWLEY Tel: 01293 528800

CROYDON Tel: 0181 649 7600

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

GLASGOW Tel: 01436 228000

IT IS the most avant-garde interior ever seen in an old parish church and the public love it (Maxine Simney writes). All Saints', Hereford with its twisted spire, was almost derelict when Andrew Mottram took over as priest in charge in 1991. Now it has reopened with a café in the nave, a kitchen shaped like a peanut husk, boat-shaped hanging gallery and vestry like a Tardis. Mr Mottram says: "No one has cried

Café in nave offers food for thought in church

abomination or complained of traders in the temple. They feel this is what the Church should be doing. I don't believe in putting people through a lot of hoops: they can simply come in and have an uplifting experience, of good food in beautiful surroundings." The café is open from 8.30am to 5.45pm, and offers "Hereford prices", starting at 80p for coffee. Mr Mottram has even obtained a licence and serves wine and local organic cider. It has been set up by Bill Sewell, who founded the Place Below in the crypt of St Mary-le-Bow in the City of London. Services are more frequent and better attended than in years. Mr Mottram says: "We've done a disservice by making churches God-boxes, not people places. Consecration does not set a building apart. It gives it a purpose and doesn't exclude other activities."

Karl Pigott, treasurer of All Saints', prepares for a service in the Tardis-like vestry

Sacked clergy have no right to legal action

By Robin Young

DISMISSED clergymen have no rights under employment laws because they are servants of God rather than employees of the Church, the Court of Appeal ruled yesterday.

The court dismissed an appeal by an Anglican clergyman against an employment appeals tribunal ruling that he could not take his case of unfair dismissal before an industrial tribunal.

Lord Justice Staughton said: "A minister of religion serves God and his congregation but does not serve an employer... There is not a contract that he will serve a terrestrial employer in the performance of his duties."

The Rev Alex Coker, 48, was ousted from his home and his post at St Philip's Church in Chertsey, southwest London, by the Bishop of Croydon in May 1994, without being given any reason. When he took his case to an industrial tribunal, claiming his dismissal was unfair and racially motivated, the tribunal ruled that it had no power to hear his case.

The Church of England has always claimed that clergy work for God, and are office holders not employees. That view was upheld by the appeals tribunal last year. Dr Coker took his action against the Bishop of Southwark, who licensed him as a curate in 1990, to the Court of Appeal.

In a hearing a fortnight ago his counsel, Joseph Hage, argued that he had accepted a written offer of a curate's post, which amounted to a contract. Dr Coker was entitled to rely on the Employment Protection Act and should not lose his home, income and career without being able to challenge his dismissal.

But Paul Goulding, for the bishop, said that Dr Coker's working life was not conducted by contract but by conscience, and that God, not the bishop, was his employer.

Lord Justice Staughton said: "That makes it all very difficult. I don't think you have an address for Him so you will not be able to serve any documents."

The Bishop of Southwark, the Right Rev Roy Williams, said after the case: "I am delighted but not surprised at the judgment. This clarification of an important point of law has significance throughout the Church."

Relaxing Luxury Breaks

At one of the UK's finest country house hotels

3 NIGHTS FOR THE PRICE OF 2

AVAILABLE FROM 13TH JULY TO 31ST AUGUST 1997

Set in 26 acres of private grounds, the award winning New Hall in Walmley is the oldest inhabited manor house in England. Close to Lichfield and Coventry Cathedrals, Warwick Castle, Stratford-upon-Avon and other major local attractions.

BOOK BY TELEPHONE

- RAC Blue Ribbon, AA 4 Red Stars, An Egon Ronay Deluxe Hotel.
- 62 Bedrooms with private bathrooms, colour TV with Sky.
- Award winning non-smoking restaurant with three AA Rosettes. Reservations are essential and all gentlemen are asked to wear a jacket and tie for dinner.
- Leisure facilities include all weather tennis court and a 9 hole golf course.
- Not suitable for children under 8 years.
- The Snowdome at Tamworth, Europe's first real snow slope, is 15 minutes away.
- Only 5 minutes from the Belfry golf course and 8 miles east of Birmingham.
- Only £126 per person for 3 nights including full English breakfast.

Ask your Travel Agent to book through Highlife on 0800 700 400 or call

0121 378 2442

Please quote reference TT1207

New Hall

A Thistle Country House Hotel

Walmley Road, Walmley, Sutton Coldfield, B76 1QX

The prices advertised only apply to reservations made in advance and do not apply to guests already booked at the hotel. Bookings subject to limited availability. All details, including terms of booking, are available on request. Price per adult based on two people sharing a double or twin room. No single occupancy.

The Sale of Excellence

BOSCH

ENERGY EFFICIENT 'Softline' Fridges

OFFER
£299.99
PRICE

Bosch KTR 1670
60 cm Larder Fridge
• 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
• CFC and HFC free
• 4 safety glass shelves
• Auto defrost
• Capacity 5.4 cu.ft. (net)

Also available in 55cm KTR 1572 £279.99 and 50cm KTR 1544 £229.99

KTL 1572 60 cm Fridge
• 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
• CFC and HFC free
• 4 star freezer box
• 3 safety glass shelves
• Capacity: Fridge 4.2 cu.ft. Freezer 0.6 cu.ft. (net)

Also available in 55cm KTL 1502 £279.99 and 50cm KTL 1444 £239.99

KSR 2701 Upright Fridge £449.99
• 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
• CFC and HFC free • 1460mm high • 60 cm wide
• 6 safety glass shelves • Capacity 9.4 cu.ft. (net)

Superior Quality 'Softline' Freezers

GSL 1202 60cm Tabletop Freezer

- 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
- Totally CFC and HFC Free
- 4 Star freezer
- Superfast freezing
- Capacity 3.4 cu.ft. (net)
- Optical and acoustic warning system

Also available in 55cm GSL 1100 £299.99 and 50cm GSD 1343 £249.99

GSU 2104 Upright Freezer

- CFC free • 'Frost Free' system
- Capacity 6.1 cu.ft. (net)
- Electronic controls
- 66 cm wide
- 5 freezer drawers
- 4 star freezer

£599.99

GSD 2617 Upright Freezer

- CFC and HFC Free
- 4 Star freezer
- 60 cm wide
- Superfast freezing
- 1 fast freeze compartment
- Capacity 7.4 cu.ft. (net)
- Optical and acoustic warning system

Super Economical & Environmentally Friendly 'Softline' Fridge/Freezers

Bosch KGU 3201

- 'Frost-Free' system
- 60 cm wide
- Totally CFC and HFC Free
- Separate temperature controls
- Fridge capacity 6.8 cu ft (net)
- Freezer capacity 3.6 cu ft (net)

KKE 3495 'Silver Tower'
• Stainless steel look
• CFC and HFC Free • 66cm wide
• Separate temperature controls
• Fridge capacity 6.7 cu ft (net)
• Freezer capacity 4.4 cu ft (net)

£899.99

KSV 2402 Fridge Freezer
• Totally CFC and HFC Free • 55cm wide
• 4 shelves (3 height adjustable)
• Fridge capacity 6.0 cu ft (net)
• Freezer capacity 2.0 cu ft (net)

£299.99

Bosch KSV 2630

- Totally CFC and HFC free
- 60cm wide
- 4 shelves (3 height adjustable)
- Fridge Capacity 6.7 cu ft (net)
- Freezer Capacity 2.4 cu ft (net)

KKU 2901 Fridge Freezer
• CFC and HFC Free
• 'Frost Free' system • 66cm wide
• Separate temperature controls
• Fridge capacity 6.7 cu ft (net)
• Freezer capacity 2.6 cu ft (net)

£679.99

KGE 3301 Fridge Freezer

- CFC and HFC free
- 60cm wide
- Separate temperature controls
- Fridge capacity 6.7 cu.ft. (net)
- Freezer capacity 4.4 cu.ft. (net)

£499.99

BOSCH

Excellence comes as standard

Prices may vary from store to store. Prices shown are manufacturers suggested selling prices between 1st July and 31st July 1997.

Available from leading department stores and major electrical retailers. For further information please call for free brochure and local stockist list on 01222 211400 (24 hrs. helpline). Robert Bosch Domestic Appliances, Grand Union House, Old Waverley Road, Wolverton, Milton Keynes MK12 5PL.

محلات الامن الاصل

IT IS the most avant-garde interior ever seen in an old parish church and the public love it (Marcus Binney writes). All Saints', Hereford, with its twisted spire, was almost derelict when Andrew Mottram took over as priest in charge in 1991. Now it has reopened with a café in the nave, a kitchen shaped like a peanut husk, boat-shaped hanging gallery and vestry like a Tardis. Mr Mottram says: "No one has cried

Café in nave offers food for thought in church

abomination or complained of traders in the temple. They feel this is what the Church should be doing. I don't believe in putting people through a lot of hoops; they can simply come in and have an uplifting experience, of good food in beautiful surroundings." The café is open from 8.30am to 5.45pm, and offers "Hereford prices", starting at 80p for coffee. Mr Mottram has even obtained a licence and serves

wine and local organic cider. It has been set up by Bill Sewell, who founded the Place Below in the crypt of St Mary-le-Bow in the City of London. Services are more frequent and better attended than in years. Mr Mottram says: "We've done a disservice by making churches God-boxes, not people places. Consecration does not set a building apart. It gives it a purpose and doesn't exclude other activities."

Karl Pigott, treasurer of All Saints', prepares for a service in the Tardis-like vestry

Sacked clergy have no right to legal action

By Robin Young

DISMISSED clergymen have no rights under employment laws because they are servants of God rather than employees of the Church, the Court of Appeal ruled yesterday.

The court dismissed an appeal by an Anglican clergyman against an employment tribunal ruling that he could not take his case of unfair dismissal before an industrial tribunal.

Lord Justice Staughton said: "A minister of religion serves God and his congregation but does not serve an employer."

There is not a contract that he will serve a terrestrial employer in the performance of his duties. The Rev Alex Coker, 48, was ousted from his home and his post at St Philip's Church in Chisum, southwest London, by the Bishop of Croydon in May 1994, without being given any reason. When he took his case to an industrial tribunal, claiming his dismissal was unfair and racially motivated, the tribunal ruled that it had no power to hear his case.

The Church of England has always claimed that clergy work for God, and are office holders not employees. That view was upheld by the appeals tribunal last year. Dr Coker took his action against the Bishop of Southwark, who licensed him as a curate in 1990, to the Court of Appeal.

In a hearing a fortnight ago his counsel, Joseph Hage, argued that he had accepted a written offer of a curate's post, which amounted to a contract. Dr Coker was entitled to rely on the Employment Protection Act and should not lose his home, income and career without being able to challenge his dismissal.

But Paul Goulding, for the bishop, said that Dr Coker's working life was not conducted by contract but by conscience, and that God, not the bishop, was his employer. Lord Justice Staughton said: "That makes it all very difficult. I don't think you have an address for Him so you will not be able to serve any documents."

The Bishop of Southwark, the Right Rev Roy Williamson, said after the case: "I am delighted but not surprised at the judgment. This clarification of an important point of law has significance throughout the Church."

Relaxing Luxury Breaks

At one of the UK's finest country house hotels

3 NIGHTS FOR THE PRICE OF 2

AVAILABLE FROM 13TH JULY TO 31ST AUGUST 1997

Set in 26 acres of private grounds, the award winning New Hall in Walmley is the oldest inhabited walled manor house in England. Close to Lichfield and Coventry Cathedrals, Warwick Castle, Stratford-upon-Avon and other major local attractions.

BOOK BY 31ST JULY

- RAC Blue Ribbon, AA 4 Red Stars, An Egon Rosay Deluxe Hotel.
- 62 Bedrooms with private bathrooms, colour TV with Sky.
- Award winning non-smoking restaurant with three AA Rosettes. Reservations are essential and all gentlemen are asked to wear a jacket and tie for dinner.
- Leisure facilities include all weather tennis court and a 9 hole golf course.
- Not suitable for children under 8 years.
- The Snowdonia at Tamworth, Europe's first real snow ski slope, is 15 minutes away.
- Only 5 minutes from the Belfry golf course and 8 miles east of Birmingham.
- Only £126 per person for 3 nights including full English breakfast.

Ask your Travel Agent to book through Highlife on 0800 700 400 or call

0121 378 2442

Please quote reference TT1207

New Hall

At Huddell Country House Hotel
Walmley Road, Walmley, Sutton Coldfield, B76 1QX

The Sale of Excellence

BOSCH

ENERGY EFFICIENT 'Softline' Fridges

OFFER
£299.99
PRICE

Bosch KTR 1670
60 cm Larder Fridge
• 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
• CFC and HFC free
• 4 safety glass shelves
• Auto defrost
• Capacity 5.4 cu.ft. (net)

Also available in 55cm KTR 1572 £279.99
and 50cm KTR 1544 £229.99

KTL 1572 60 cm Fridge
• 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
• CFC and HFC free
• 4 star freezer box
• 3 safety glass shelves
• Capacity: Fridge 4.2 cu.ft.
Freezer 0.6 cu.ft. (net)

Also available in 55cm KTL 1502 £279.99
and 50cm KTL 1444 £239.99

KSR 2701 Upright Fridge £449.99
• 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
• CFC and HFC free • 1460mm high • 80 cm wide
• 6 safety glass shelves • Capacity 9.4 cu.ft. (net)

"A few always have been, and I thought to see that someone could inspect one of my products and find a defect in some way. For the reason I have consistently tried to produce products which can withstand the closest scrutiny. Products which prove themselves to be superior in every respect."

Robert Bosch (1861-1942)

Superior Quality 'Softline' Freezers

GSL 1202 60cm Tabletop Freezer

- 'A' Energy Efficiency rating
- Totally CFC and HFC Free
- 4 Star freezer
- Superfast freezing
- Capacity 3.4 cu.ft. (net)
- Optical and acoustic warning system

Also available in 55cm GSL 1100 £299.99
and 50cm GSD 1343 £249.99

GSU 2104 Upright Freezer

- CFC free • 'Frost Free' system
- Capacity 6.1 cu.ft. (net)
- Electronic controls
- 66 cm wide
- 5 freezer drawers
- 4 star freezer

£599.99

GSD 2617 Upright Freezer

- CFC and HFC Free
- 4 Star freezer
- 80 cm wide
- Superfast freezing
- 1 fast freeze compartment
- Capacity 7.4 cu.ft. (net)
- Optical and acoustic warning system

Super Economical & Environmentally Friendly 'Softline' Fridge/Freezers

Bosch KGU 3201
Fridge Freezer

- "Frost-Free" system
- 60 cm wide
- Totally CFC and HFC Free
- Separate temperature controls
- Fridge capacity 6.8 cu ft (net)
- Freezer capacity 3.6 cu ft (net)

IKU 3496 'Silver Tower'
• Stainless steel look
• CFC and HFC Free • 66cm wide
• Separate temperature controls
• Fridge capacity 6.7 cu ft (net)
• Freezer capacity 4.4 cu ft (net) £899.99

KSV 2402 Fridge Freezer
• Totally CFC and HFC Free • 55cm wide
• 4 shelves (3 height adjustable)
• Fridge capacity 6.0 cu ft (net)
• Freezer capacity 2.0 cu ft (net) £299.99

Bosch KSV 2630
Fridge Freezer

- Totally CFC and HFC free
- 60cm wide
- 4 shelves (3 height adjustable)
- Fridge Capacity 6.7 cu ft (net)
- Freezer Capacity 2.4 cu ft (net)

KKU 2901 Fridge Freezer
• CFC and HFC Free
• "Frost Free" system • 66cm wide
• Separate temperature controls
• Fridge capacity 6.7 cu ft (net)
• Freezer capacity 2.6 cu ft (net) £679.99

KGE 3301 Fridge Freezer
• CFC and HFC free
• 60cm wide
• Separate temperature controls
• Fridge capacity 6.7 cu.ft. (net)
• Freezer capacity 4.4 cu.ft. (net) £499.99

BOSCH

Excellence comes as standard

Prices may vary from store to store. Prices shown are manufacturers suggested selling prices between 1st July and 31st July 1997.

Available from leading department stores and major electrical retailers.
For further information please call for free brochure and local stockist list on 01235 211500 (24 hours 7 days a week).
Robert Bosch Domestic Appliances, Grand Union House, Old Wolverton Road, Wolverton, Milton Keynes MK12 5PT.

Oil battle looms at Alaska sanctuary

FROM IAN BRODIE IN WASHINGTON

THE British oil company BP is at odds with the US Government and environmentalists over the discovery of oil beside the last great sanctuary for Arctic wildlife in Alaska.

The tussle is a warning of the pressure building on Washington from oil companies and the state of Alaska. They want to open potential oilfields in the frozen north on a scale not seen since the development of Prudhoe Bay 30 years ago.

The strike by BP and Chevron is at a site called Sourdough on state land just a mile from the border of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. This all but confirms that there is oil under the refuge, a federal preserve. The moment BP and Chevron announced their find last March, Bruce Babbitt, the Secretary of the Interior, declared that the Administration was firmly opposed to any drilling within the refuge.

Since then, battle lines have been drawn. Environmentalists have emphasised the importance of the refuge, a fragile ecosystem of 19 million acres, teeming with an extraordinary diversity of life. Migratory residents include more than 180 bird species, new families of musk oxen reintroduced after being hunted to near-extinction, pregnant polar bears seeking dens and a herd of 150,000 caribou. All would be too nervous to withstand the advance of mankind with drilling rigs.

While barring oil exploration in the refuge, Mr Babbitt wants royalties for any oil taken out of Sourdough, on the ground that much of it will really be oil from under the refuge that has seeped across the border. BP says Mr Babbitt must first prove that it comes from the refuge. To do so, according to BP, he must drill in the refuge. That would require an Act of Congress and was out of the question, replied Mr Babbitt.

Paul Laird, BP's spokesman in Alaska, said the company could drill as close as 500ft to the refuge, but he did not know how the Government could prove there was recoverable oil on its side of the fence without drilling a well.

John Leshy, a senior adviser to Mr Babbitt, disagreed. He said that drawing oil from under a neighbour's land was a common practice and there were well-known procedures for deciding compensation short of drilling.

"We're at an impasse," said a spokesman for Tony Knowles, Alaska's Governor, who supports development of Sourdough if BP and Chevron decide it is commercially viable.

About 80 per cent of Alaskans are pro-oil. One compelling reason is that each of them receives at least $1,000 (£600) every year from an oil fund. Another is that oil's lucrative jobs will be threatened when Prudhoe Bay is tapped out.

Mr Knowles and the oil companies contend that the US is too dependent on foreign oil — 52 per cent of consumption was imported last year. They argue that oilfield technology is now far kinder to Alaska's environment.

But oilfields still cause unacceptable pollution, says the Natural Resources Defence Council, a private group advocating improved fuel economy. Its research shows that 900 million barrels might lie under the wildlife refuge. That would meet America's needs for 51 days.

President Clinton, with President Constantinescu of Romania beside him, points enthusiastically to the crowds gathered to welcome him yesterday at Bucharest's University Square. Mr Clinton told the huge throng that he will help to secure their country a seat in the Nato alliance. If they continue to embrace democracy, "Stay the course! The future is yours!" Mr Clinton explored in a speech that drew prolonged applause. Speaking in a square symbolising the bloody stand against communism, Mr Clinton held out the hope that Romania will be invited in the next round of Nato expansion. "The door to Nato is open," Mr Clinton said. "And we will help you walk through it." (Reuters)

Clinton hails Romanians

communism, Mr Clinton held out the hope that Romania will be invited in the next round of Nato expansion. "The door to Nato is open," Mr Clinton said. "And we will help you walk through it." (Reuters)

communism, Mr Clinton held out the hope that Romania will be invited in the next round of Nato expansion. "The door to Nato is open," Mr Clinton said. "And we will help you walk through it." (Reuters)

We know this might sound a little unusual but we'd like you to think less of us.

THE SAAB 900i, ONLY £15,500 ON THE ROAD.

To arrange a test drive call 0800 626 556.

£199 PER MONTH PLUS INITIAL DEPOSIT. CONTRACT HIRE SCHEME FOR BUSINESS USERS ONLY. TYPICAL EXAMPLE: SAAB 900i. Period of hire = 48 months. Deposit = £3,264.29. Monthly payments = £47 x £199.00. On the road cash price = £15,500.00.

TO SAAB INFORMATION CENTRE, FREEPOST WC45L4, LONDON WC1B 3BR. PLEASE SEND FURTHER INFORMATION ON THE SAAB 900 ☐ SAAB 900i CD (SALOON) ☐ SAAB 900iCS (SDR) ☐
 Name Address Postcode
 Present car make & model Year of reg Age if under 18 Attach your business card or phone 0800 626 556 or fax 0171 404 6449
 *Contract based on 10,000 miles p/ann-maintenance. Price correct at press date. Excess mileage charges 35p per mile. Full written quotation available on request. Indemnity may be required in certain circumstances. All payments include VAT.

هنا منه الأصل

WORLD IN BRIEF

Cook in Moscow talks on security

London: Robin Cook leaves tomorrow for Moscow for two days of talks expected to consolidate Labour's political and security relations with Russia as Britain prepares to take over the presidency of the European Union as well as the leadership of the Group of Eight (writes Michael Binyon/Diplomatic Editor).

On his first visit as Foreign Secretary, Mr Cook will hold talks with Yevgeni Primakov, his opposite number, which are expected to focus on Russia's relations with the European Union and East-West security after the acceptance of three new applicants for Nato membership.

Mr Cook will also have talks on growing security co-operation between London and Moscow. Britain has been disturbed by the growing influence of Russian mafia gangs overseas, and suggestions that mafia leaders are attempting to buy property in Britain for operations abroad. Trade is the other main topic of the two-day talks.

Mistake mars rover's day

Pasadena: The Mars rover became stuck against a rock, depriving controllers of a day's data from the Pathfinder mission because of a two-minute miscalculation, scientists said. The spacecraft missed an instruction to turn or its radio receiver for orders on overnight manoeuvres. The signal was to be re-sent, and the rover and a camera on the mothership were expected to resume operations. Meanwhile, the rover was left immobile, with one of its six wheels halfway up a 22lb rock which scientists have dubbed Yogi. (AP)

Confidence vote survived

Vienna: Austria's Foreign Minister, Wolfgang Schüssel, right, survived a confidence vote brought by the three small opposition parties over reported derogatory comments about several foreign leaders. Herr Schüssel, well known among Austrian reporters for making blunt remarks to journalists, had strenuously denied making any of the comments, which allegedly included calling Madeleine Albright, the US Secretary of State, "an aging Bette Davis". (AP)

Boy killed in Pakistan feud

Karachi: The mutilated body of a ten-year-old boy who was strangled with a rope was found dumped in bushes in Karachi's crowded Lines district (Zahid Hussain writes). He was the fourth boy killed over the past three days on suspicion of being an informer for rival political factions or police. The murder of young boys is the latest twist in the political violence and revenge killings in Pakistan's commercial and financial capital involving the Mohajir Qaumi Movement and the dissident Haqiqi faction which have left more than 250 dead over the last four months.

Aids virus came from a kiss

New York: Health officials have reported the first documented case of the Aids virus being transmitted through kissing (Tunku Varadarajan writes). A woman is thought to have acquired the virus from deep kisses with a man who was HIV-positive. However, the report, released by the Centres for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, emphasises that the virus was apparently transmitted by blood from the man's rotten gums, not by his saliva alone.

Woman hired shoplifter

St Paul, Minnesota: A wealthy dentist and his daughter were acquitted of hiring a shoplifter to steal such luxuries as Baccarat crystal, Armani suits and Polo sportswear, but the man's wife was convicted on a felony charge. Gerald Dick, Judy Dick and their daughter — Stacy Zehren, a Chicago attorney — were accused of paying a thief to go into Dayton's department store and steal the items. The jury decided that the wife tried to buy designer goods worth $7,000 (£4,100) she knew were stolen. (AP)

Ten die in Bombay statue riot

Bombay: At least ten people, including two children and a woman, were killed when police opened fire on a crowd protesting here at the desecration of a social activist's statue, police said. They said trouble started when a statue of Bhimrao Ambedkar, a revered leader of the lower social classes, was found garlanded with shoes, viewed as an insulting gesture. The protesters were fired on after they set fire to lorries, a Maharashtra state minister said. (Reuters)

China's soldiers of fortune

Beijing: Chinese soldiers stationed in Hong Kong are to get a pay rise of 900 per cent. China has been forced to up the meagre mainland salaries of troops garrisoned in the former colony — about £4 a month — to help them cope with exorbitant living costs. They are now to get between about £35 and £43 a month, about nine times what their counterparts on the mainland receive, the Weekly Digest said. (Reuters)

A woman reaches for a firefighters' harness from a window of the Royal Jomtien Resort hotel at the height of the blaze and assists an American child to be winched up to the roof. She herself then uses the rope to follow the child to safety.

Tourists saved as 80 die in Thai hotel fire

FROM ANDREW DRUMMOND
IN RANGE OF

MORE THAN 80 people died of burns and suffocation and 64 were injured after being trapped in a blazing hotel in the Thai beach resort of Pattaya-Jomtien yesterday.

In horrifying scenes several guests leapt to their deaths to avoid flames as others were snatched to safety by firefighters lowering ropes from the roof.

Most of the guests died where they were trapped as the hotel's fire alarm and fire sprinklers failed to operate, and several fire doors were reported to have been locked. This may have been to prevent guests sneaking away without paying their bills, Bangkok's Channel 7 television claimed.

The 16-storey Royal Jomtien Resort, owned by a Thai business consortium, became a towering inferno after a fire in a wok being used by a cook in the first-floor kitchens set off a series of gas explosions from gas canisters stored near by.

the kitchen. Next came more than 20 of 80 workers attending a Thai Electricity Authority conference above. Among the early casualties were foyer and office staff, including the hotel manager and the chief cashier, who was the daughter of the owner.

Guests had no warning as the fire enveloped the hotel's foyer and office area and flames, accompanied by thick, billowing smoke, started shooting up lift shafts and stairwells.

Scores of cars parked in the hotel's underground car park began exploding, fuelling the blaze. Late last night fire and rescue officials were still bringing charred bodies out of the wreckage.

Suchart Pachinman, the provincial Governor, called for an immediate inquiry and all hotels in the area to be inspected. Checks would be made today to see what equipment was working and what doors were locked.

The fire broke out in the kitchens soon after 10.40am when the cooks were preparing breakfasts for some of the late risers. If it had started earlier, the death toll would have been higher as guests would have been asleep in their beds.

David Rice, Britain's honorary consul, visited the scene and was last night checking three hospitals in the area where the injured had been taken. So far, however, despite the resort being popular with British tourists, there are no reports of Britons among the casualties.

An American guest, aged 38, was in her room on the 15th floor with her 11-year-old daughter when she realised something was wrong. Her rescue was dramatically captured on film as she was pulled up by rope by firefighters who had landed by helicopter on the roof. "I realised there was a fire because I could smell the smoke. I phoned downstairs, but they said 'do not come down at any cost. Stay where you are'."

"It was not possible to leave the room because the fire was raging below. There was smoke everywhere outside. I soaked a towel and put it under the door and managed to call a friend on a handphone to tell him of our predicament," she said. "We waited and waited. The smoke became very bad. I cannot say how grateful I am for the helicopter and the fireman who came to lower down a rope.

"There was no warning of the fire. No alarm. There was no alarm from smoke detectors, no working sprinkler system. Nothing. No notification at all."

Last night the owner of the Royal Jomtien Resort was not available to comment. He was in Bangkok — a two-hour drive away from the blaze scene — and was described as too shocked at the death of his daughter to visit the scene.

Deposed Cambodian leader pleads for US intervention

By BRONWEN MADDOX IN WASHINGTON AND DAVID WATTS

AMERICA is withdrawing 40 diplomats and their families from Cambodia and has urged other Americans, estimated at between 1,000 and 1,300, to leave immediately.

A number of Britons left Phnom Penh yesterday on aircraft of the Royal Australian Air Force, and Japan has, for the first time since the war sent military aircraft into Thailand to pick up its nationals.

In protest at the deteriorating situation, the United States has already suspended aid to Cambodia for at least 30 days. Prince Norodom Ranariddh, ousted as Cambodian First Prime Minister at the weekend, arrived in Washington yesterday to plead for intervention to stop his country's hopes of peace and prosperity slipping away.

On the fifth day of his shuttle round the globe to muster opposition to his rival, Second Prime Minister Hun Sen, he was due to meet Thomas Pickering, Assistant Secretary for Political Affairs. He was expected to call on the United States and the United Nations not to recognise any government emerging from the weekend coup.

On Thursday in New York, after talks with the UN Security Council president, Peter Osvald, the Prince said he had also asked the council to appeal for mediation in the

In Cambodia, denying that he had carried out a coup, Hun Sen said that the Prince was not banned from returning, but said that he would be put on trial if he did.

Beilin: Britain suited to role in region

Israeli negotiator urges Britain to initiate new peace process

By MICHAEL BINYON, DIPLOMATIC EDITOR

THE Israeli architect of the Oslo accords said yesterday that the US had all but abandoned the Middle East peace process, and called on Britain to step in and lead a new European-sponsored package.

Yossi Beilin, the Opposition's foreign affairs spokesman, said the Americans "have just left some phone numbers for us to call when things start moving again". The situation was now explosive: for the first time since 1991, no talks were going on anywhere and extremists were gaining ground.

Mr. Beilin called for a new package including a freeze on Israeli building at Har Homa, outside Jerusalem; agreement on a further Israeli interim withdrawal from occupied territory; and the beginning of talks on a final settlement.

He said the level of mistrust between the Palestinians and Binyamin Netanyahu's Likud Government was so high that neither side would even consider a plan put forward by the other. A new international mediator was needed.

Britain, he said, was ideally suited for this role. It had long experience and deep knowledge of the Middle East. It would hold the presidency of the European Union next year and lead the foreign policy troika. "This could be a mission for the British presidency," he said. After talks with Robin Cook, he said Britain had not jumped at the idea "but nor did they

Mr. Bellin said he could not guarantee that the Netanyahu Government would accept a British-led initiative. He thought the Palestinians would do so, however. Unless talks started again soon, "the room for misunderstanding is so big that violence is almost inevitable".

THE SUNDAY TIMES

NEWS REVIEW

THE TEMPEST

Tempers, tears and terror: the truth about the disabled crew racing round the world

CULTURE

KITSCH CHRIST
How Elvis is being resurrected as a religion

MAGAZINE

GINNIE THE MONEY!
The shark who puts the bite on football

STYLE

DOES IT MAKE ME LOOK FAT?

See the latest in menswear tomorrow

THE SUNDAY TIMES IS THE SUNDAY PAPERS

NEW MORTGAGES AND REMORTGAGES

LIMITED OFFER

7.19% PA 8.5% APR

fix for 5.1% for

Press. Pundits. People at work.
Everyone's talking about interest rates going up.
With our new Five Year Fixed Rate Mortgage, you can afford to ignore them.
It removes all of the uncertainty about fluctuating interest rates. And replaces it with the comfort of knowing exactly what you'll be paying until 1st October 2002.

It's your choice.

- You can choose our lowest rate (the one shown opposite) if you take out our buildings and contents insurance.
- Alternatively, if you prefer to arrange your own insurance, we have other options available.

So fix it while you can. This is strictly a Limited Offer.

Ask for full details at your nearest Northern Rock branch.
Or telephone our Mortgage Hotline any time between 9am and 3pm Monday to Friday, or between 10am and 3pm weekends.

0800 591 500

NORTHERN ROCK

Northern Rock Building Society. Principal Office: Northern Rock House, Gosforth, Newcastle upon Tyne NE3 4PL.
Branches throughout the UK. Please consult Yellow Pages.

The interest rate charged on the Five Year Fixed Mortgage will be 7.19% (8.5% APR) until 1.10.2002. Example: An interest only mortgage of £50,000 over a 25 year term (200 monthly payments) - equivalent to 1.8339% secured against a property being purchased for £175,000. 300 monthly mortgage payments net of tax £301.24. Total amount payable £106,352.40. Lender's fee at £200. Valuation fee at £185. Solicitor's costs £180.25 (England & Wales). Supplemental Special Insurance Premium £342.37. (Deductible 1). Max. loan to value for Home Purchase and Remortgage 90%. If you require a loan up to 95% from its value another Five Year Fixed Rate product is available. If the mortgage is repaid in full or in part within five years no completion or transfer duty. Early Repayment Charge of 5% of the amount repaid will be made. This offer may be withdrawn at any time. The 7.19% PA interest rate includes a 0.25% discount above base rate for borrowers who purchase a new or existing property. A written guarantee can be obtained on request. Only available to persons 18 years of age or over. Subject to credit approval. Northern Rock cannot advise its customers on their personal tax. It is not to be taken as any guarantee of our products. You should contact your local tax office. Representative with of the Legal & General marketing group members of which are regulated by the Financial Services Authority (FSA) for the purpose of making introductions to other Legal & General representatives for recommending, advising on and selling life assurance and investment products bearing Legal & General's name.

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT.

Bosnia Serbs accuse SAS snatch squad of 'assassination'

THE Bosnian Serb disinformation machine swung into action yesterday, claiming that British SAS units assassinated Siniša Djokic, the indicted war crimes suspect, and that his colleague, Milan Kovacevic, had been taken by troops posing as Red Cross workers.

Liljana Karadzic, head of the Republika Srpska Red Cross and wife of the Bosnian Serb leader, wrote a letter condemning the SAS action to the International Committee of the Red Cross in Geneva. In Prijedor, a crowd of 2,000 protested in front of the town hall before marching on the local British troop command centre, shouting "Ustashe murderers!" and demanding the return of Dr Kovacevic.

Momir Talic, the commander of the local Krajina corps of the Bosnian Serb Army, has accused the British troops involved of "cheating" the local population, and warned that the excellent relationship built up by the Stabilisation Force (Sfor) in the region could be in jeopardy. Mr Talic said his "scouts" had closely monitored the build-up to Operation Tango, and knew that SAS units had been brought in from outside. In Prijedor it is even rumoured that local Serbs were used by the SAS to track Mr Djokic.

The government newspapers in Banja Luka were also unsparing in their criticism. "The occupiers killed him," ran the headline in Glas Srpski, and Vecernje Novosti said simply: "Nato hunts Serbs". The truth appeared to be a casualty of the furor surrounding the SAS action, the first time Nato troops in Bosnia have struck against suspected war criminals. Once again, Bosnian Serbs felt they are being victimised, and there was dark talk of retaliation against foreigners.

What seems certain, however, is that Nato has been economical with details in its account of Thursday morning's fatal snatch operation. Two elderly peasants living opposite the lake where Mr Djokic died, spoke of their terror as British helicopters hovered and dropped smoke-bombs yards from their house. "I thought the war was starting again," said Mira Bulic. "There was smoke and so much shooting. I didn't dare to look." Radio Prijedor,

Peacekeepers are under attack after the operation to capture war crimes suspects, Tom Walker reports from Prijedor

a notorious agent of "ethnic cleansing", chained four helicopters had hovered above Mr Djokic's lakeside trailer, while 20 troops jumped from four vehicles, two of them military, and ordered him outside. Mr Djokic emerged in his bathing suit, it said, and ran for the beach, about 30 yards across a picnic area.

"They fired automatic weapons and he fell," said Zoran Baros, the station's editor. "A soldier went over to him and shot him twice in the head." Speaking in front of a portrait of Radovan Karadzic, Mr Baros said the Prijedor police had collected the fatal bullets from the shingle, and had photographic evidence proving the slaughter of a defenceless Serb about to enjoy a morning's fishing.

"If they are capable of going into a hospital posing as the Red Cross, then they are capable of this," he said. "How can it be such a problem for 20 soldiers to take on one man?"

They fired automatic weapons and he fell. A soldier went over and shot him twice in the head

The track leading to Mr Djokic's lakeside hideaway passes the haunting lands of his darkest deeds. A gravel lane winds past the village of Omarska and the remains of its notorious concentration camp, and then on past the Lubija open-cast mine, where the mainly Muslim inmates of Omarska were churned in heavy machinery and buried beneath lime. If he had reached the war crimes tribunal in The Hague alive, Mr Djokic would have been questioned over his involvement in up to 5,000 deaths and disappearances.

It is an eerie landscape of rusting machinery and redundant railways, nestled amid the folds of rolling Serb pasture. An Orthodox church stands just yards from where Mr Djokic fell; on the shingle two wreaths of flowers and candles marked the spot. Small patches of the pebbles and grit were stained dark with blood; Mr Djokic's trailer had been removed, again by the Prijedor police. "What the soldiers did to him was a sin against God," said Mrs Bulic's sister Bosiljka, echoing a familiar theme on the streets of Prijedor, where Mr Djokic was described by many as an upstanding citizen, a family man and patriot.

Attracting equal controversy is the raid on Prijedor hospital. Dobrica Rodic, Dr Kovacevic's secretary, described on Radio Prijedor how three uniformed men and one in civilian dress had arrived bearing a parcel from the "Red Cross in Belgrade". Mrs Rodic said that, as she opened the door to Dr Kovacevic's office, one of the uni-

Letters, page 23

Bosnian Serbs give victory salutes during a protest outside the Stabilisation Force offices in Prijedor yesterday

healthcheck

With an expert health check every two years, our plans look after you inside out.

PPP healthcare's Key Plan looks after you even when you're fit and well.

You see, it actually includes an expert Health Check every two years after you join. Of course, these checks may simply confirm you're every bit as well as you feel. But they can also help you to identify and, if necessary, arrange treatment for any problems before they become more serious.

There are many more good reasons to join PPP healthcare. Like immediate access to private in-patient hospital treatment and cover for out-patient surgical procedures.

You'll also enjoy access to our freephone 24-hour Health Information Line... all from around just £13 a month.

For your full PPP healthcare Key Plan information pack and personal quotation, call us now or complete and return the coupon below. If you want immediate cover we can arrange that for you too - just call us today.

Call now and get your first month free
0800 33 55 55

Ref. 6553

A 5% discount for annual payment - plus an extra 5% discount in the first year if you take advantage of immediate cover and pay by credit card. (8am-8pm weekdays, 9am-1pm Saturdays.) Calls may be recorded.

Send for a free no-obligation quotation now to: PPP healthcare, FREEPOST, PPP house, Upperton Road, Eastbourne, East Sussex BN21 1JH. Net site: www.ppphealthcare.co.uk Code: Ref. 6553

(Mr/Mrs/Miss/Ms) _____ Name _____ Address _____
Postcode _____
Telephone No. (Day) _____ (Evening) _____
Date of Birth _____ / _____ / _____ (Important: we cannot give you a quotation without this date.)
Name of other adult to be included _____
Date of Birth _____ / _____ / _____ Number of children under 21 to be included _____
If you already have a current healthcare policy, please give us your renewal date _____
☐ I WOULD PREFER NOT TO RECEIVE PROMOTIONAL MAILINGS FROM OTHER COMPANIES

PPP healthcare
there to support you

BEST DEAL!
AND GO HANDS FREE!

- FREE PORTABLE HANDS FREE KIT WORTH £49.99
- FREE UP TO 31 MINS OF CALLS PER MONTH WORTH £6.99 A YEAR
- FREE 1 MONTHS INSURANCE WORTH £15.47
- FREE LEATHER CARRY CASE IN CAR ADAPTOR WORTH UP TO £35.00
- FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY
- 100 HOUR BATTERY
- PER SECOND BILLING

NOKIA 1611
• Latest Nokia GSM Phone
• 3.5 hours talk time
• Identifies incoming caller

£4.99

Ref: C171207

Have your credit card to hand and Dial-a-phone now on Freephone
0800 00 00 77

Small print text at the bottom of the advertisement.

Refusal to give MS victim new drug was illegal

By MICHAEL HORSNELL

A MAN with multiple sclerosis yesterday won his legal battle against a health authority that refused to fund his treatment with a new drug prescribed by neurologists.

North Derbyshire Health Authority's attitude towards Kenneth Fisher, from whom it withheld supplies of beta-interferon, costing £10,000 a year, was "disingenuous and unlawful", Mr Justice Dyson said at the High Court.

He ordered the authority to introduce a lawful policy and reconsider within 14 days its decision to deny the treatment. Mr Fisher, 33, was not in court. After the hearing, his father Ian, 59, said he was pleased with the judgment. "My son is poorly now. He has got to the stage where he is dependent. He wasn't that 18 months ago. He has been denied the drugs and that is where the deterioration has come." The family, from Dronfield, Derbyshire, are to take legal advice on whether to sue the authority. Kenneth Fisher's mother, Margaret, said: "I am just upset that it has taken so long."

The health authority was ordered to pay the costs of the action, estimated to be several times the annual cost of treating an MS sufferer. The judge said that it knowingly failed to apply national guidance in an NHS circular and also knew that its own policy amounted to a blanket ban on funding treatment of local MS sufferers.

He said that unacceptable and inconsistent excuses were given in an effort "to hold the line and hang on to their unsustainable position". Creative constraints had been applied to withhold funding, including the excuse that the authority would provide funds for only those patients involved in a national clinical trial of the drug.

The 14-day deadline followed a submission by John Grace, QC, that Mr Fisher's condition had deteriorated since being refused the drug 18 months ago, and that the time factor could be crucial. The court was told that Mr Fisher, who is unable to work, was diagnosed with MS in 1987 and that if he had lived only a mile further north, in Sheffield, he would have had no difficulty obtaining it.

Although the health authority had set aside funds and promised treatment, Mr Grace said that the decision to deny Mr Fisher had been taken for purely financial reasons. The judgment will force North Derbyshire to "reconsider" its policy and to pay for Mr Fisher's treatment if consultants judge that he would still benefit.

North Derbyshire Health Authority said that it would review policy and identify possible sources of increased funding. A spokesman said: "We have a preferred policy to support drugs and treatments with proven positive clinical outcomes."

Margaret and Ian Fisher at the High Court yesterday

Other patients will pay price of court ruling

By IAN MURRAY
MEDICAL CORRESPONDENT

PATIENTS throughout the country will suffer the consequences of yesterday's High Court ruling.

To pay for beta-interferon, health authorities will have to save money elsewhere. One senior official said: "It will be a case of robbing two Peters to pay Paul."

Stephen Thornton, head of the health authority group of the National Health Service Confederation, said that treatment with the drug would become a priority. "We know that multiple sclerosis sufferers can benefit from this but because it is so expensive we can only provide it if we stop treatment for others. That is the sort of horrid dilemma we are facing."

Mr Thornton is chief executive of Cambridge and Huntingdon Health Authority, which was heavily criticised recently for refusing to fund treatment for a child with cancer, Jaymee Bowen. He said that particular decision had been taken on medical grounds but added: "Unless we get a 3 per cent increase of funds in real terms every year these very difficult decisions are going to get worse and worse. The Budget gave us an extra £1.2 billion but even that does not provide the 3 per cent we need."

Beta-interferon is a genetically modified interferon — the protein that protects against viral infections. In some illnesses, including MS, these natural proteins are misidentified, attacked and destroyed by the immune system.

The drug helps to prevent the body's immune system from attacking itself. It has to be kept refrigerated and the patient injects it every other day. It is not a cure and works best with patients who suffer relapses of spasm followed by periods of remission. Although it could benefit about 10,000 MS sufferers in Britain, only about 1,000 are being treated with it.

The NHS Executive issued guidelines to health authorities when the drug was licensed in Britain two years ago. The High Court held that these guidelines amounted to an instruction that the drug should be available to those patients that neurologists believed would benefit from it.

Dr Vivienne Nathanson, the British Medical Association's head of health policy, said: "We need to get away from the lottery which means that a patient's access to treatment can depend on their postcode. Although there are national prescribing guidelines for some new drugs, for most drugs and treatment there is no guidance and health authorities have to make very tough decisions."

Cementing success: Lee Blower, 22, of Shrewsbury, Shropshire, demonstrating the expertise that won him a gold medal in the bricklaying section of the International Youth Skill Olympics at St Gallen, Switzerland

Ballet teacher wins case but not a new job

By A STAFF REPORTER

A TEACHER at the Royal Ballet School yesterday won her claim for unfair dismissal but failed to get her job back.

Linda Goss, 44, who taught for eight years at the £20,000-a-year boarding school, had said she was sacked because she complained repeatedly that children were bullied and mocked by staff.

An industrial tribunal in Croydon, south London, agreed that the dismissal was unfair but said that it was made because the school needed to make staff changes and not because of victimisation after her complaints. However, staff had not discussed the matter with her or given any consideration to her redeployment.

Ms Goss, from Dartmouth, Devon, who had been refused reinstatement to her £27,000-a-year job, was awarded £11,300 compensation. She told the tribunal that she had felt sacrificed when she learnt that her contract would not be renewed and linked this to her allegations that children were overworked and humiliated.

The former dancer with the Bolshoi Ballet said that her job at the school in Richmond, southwest London, was her life. She had been unable to find work since and was considering going abroad.

The tribunal dismissed a claim of sexual discrimination by Ms Goss, who claimed that a male teacher, Anatoli Grigoriev, was given preferential treatment over her and was paid more.

Dame Merle Park, the director of the school, said reinstatement would be "totally inappropriate" because of what Ms Goss had said during the hearing. "The allegations that have been made of the management, the staff, her colleagues, means [relationships have] been soured and we have no trust and confidence in Linda."

Kray wedding photos will be for the family's eyes only

By RICHARD FORD
HOME CORRESPONDENT

REGGIE KRAY has not been allowed to organise his own wedding photographs because it was feared they would be sold to the media. A Prison Service photographer will take the official pictures of Kray, 63, and his bride, Roberta Jones, 38, at the ceremony in the chapel of Maidstone jail on Monday.

The couple will each be given a set of proofs, but the copyright will remain with the Home Office in an attempt to stop publication. Kray's twin brother, Ronnie, died two years ago.

The Prison Service took the decision amid suspicions that pictures of the wedding would be offered to the media for £10,000. A spokesman said last night: "A Prison Service photographer will take photos of the wedding. No other photographer will be permitted to attend. The copyright will remain with the Home Office. Anyone publishing the pictures would be breaking the law, and would be prosecuted accordingly."

Kray is in the twenty-ninth year of a 30-year sentence imposed for the murder of Jack "The Hat" McVitie. He met Ms Jones a year ago when she visited the jail in Kent. His first wife, Frances, committed suicide two years after they married in 1965.

ted to attend. The copyright will remain with the Home Office. Anyone publishing the pictures would be breaking the law, and would be prosecuted accordingly."

Kray is in the twenty-ninth year of a 30-year sentence imposed for the murder of Jack "The Hat" McVitie. He met Ms Jones a year ago when she visited the jail in Kent. His first wife, Frances, committed suicide two years after they married in 1965.

THE SUMMER SALE

12th-26th JULY 1997

POLO RALPH LAUREN

143 NEW BOND STREET • LONDON W1
(0171) 491 4967

30 minutes 100 minutes 200 minutes

with so much free time to talk, no-one offers you better value

Whoever you want to have a One 2 One with, no other mobile phone service offers you more. For just £17.50 a month, you get 30 minutes of free time. Or for £29 a month, you get 100 minutes of free time. And, for only £40 a month, you get a massive 200 minutes of free time. Or, if you prefer, you can still have free local calls all weekend. You choose.

one 2 one

0500 500 121
the people to have a one 2 one with

Gun test throws doubt on King assassin

By TUNKU VARADARAJAN
IN NEW YORK

NEW forensic evidence suggests that James Earl Ray, convicted of the murder of Martin Luther King Jr, may have been jailed for a crime he did not commit.

Doubts about his trial emerged yesterday after a judge in Memphis, Tennessee, said that test bullets fired from a rifle owned by James Earl Ray had marks that differed from the bullet which killed King. Ray, who has always protested his innocence, is serving a 99-year jail sentence for the assassination in 1968 of the black civil rights leader.

Reporting his conclusions on forensic tests, Judge Joe Brown, of the Memphis Criminal Court, said: "The comparison [between the bullets] revealed that the gross and unique characteristic signature left on the 12 test bullets by the James Earl Ray rifle was not present on the death bullet."

His observations, which should excite lawyers and conspiracy theorists alike, come after tests in a laboratory, where scientists fired Ray's gun into a tank of water, later analysing the bullets under a microscope. Ray's lawyers hope that the new evidence is compelling enough to win their client a retrial.

Ray was convicted in 1969 after he pleaded guilty. He recanted days later, saying that he entered the plea only to avoid the death penalty. His guilty plea has been upheld eight times by a variety of state and federal courts.

Fish feel the catch as Yeltsin has break from rain

FROM RICHARD BERTON IN MOSCOW

PRESIDENT YELTSIN left little to chance this week when he embarked on a fishing trip in northern Russia: aircraft were scrambled to clear rain clouds, and a lake was stocked with thousands of fish to ensure the Kremlin leader had plenty to catch.

Although the Russian leader's two-month holiday in the northern lakes region of Karelia was supposed to be a quiet family break to forget the trappings of office and pressures of the job, behind the scenes a small army of Kremlin officials has been on hand to ensure the trip goes smoothly.

Following in the tradition of Soviet leaders, who even in their dotage insisted on shooting semi-tame bears and boars to prove their prowess, nothing was left to chance when the Russian leader cast his line into Lake Ukshe.

Anatoli Tsiganov, the editor of the local Karelian newspaper, said locals first knew of the arrival of their grand visitor when the authorities banned them from going on the lake to fish.

Then, despite a spate of bad weather, he said the climate suddenly changed — thanks to the expensive intervention of light aircraft designed to seed approaching rainclouds.

By far the best touch was provided by the Karelian Fisheries Commission, which was so eager to please its guest that it stocked the lake with thousands of extra fish.

"We were told by the city administration to make sure Yeltsin had a good time, and that is what we are doing," said a fisheries official, following the tradition of Prince Potemkin, whose fake villages so impressed Catherine the Great.

"There are probably an extra 10,000 fish that were specially stocked for the President," the official told the St Petersburg Times.

Kremlin sources said the President was also receiving covert help from his bodyguards, who set off each morning to dig up worms for their boss to use as bait.

Perhaps not surprisingly, the Kremlin leader appears to be notching up record catches. Naina Yeltsin, whose family is Boris Yeltsin and his wife Naina enjoy their holiday earlier this week. The President has taken up fishing after being banned from shooting.

now established for the summer at the presidential residence at Shuya, said this week that her husband came home one day with 20 fish and the next with 30, mainly perch and roach. "Some were very small, but still very tasty," she said. "I think the water is very good here."

While the President's arrival may be bad news for Karelia's fish population, the region's four-legged and feathered animals can rest easy — at least while Mrs Yeltsin is on hand.

The Kremlin leader's love of fishing is surpassed only by his passion for shooting, and even during his illness last year he claimed to have shot scores of duck and a large wild boar. However, since his heart operation last year he has been banned by his wife from picking up a gun and has concentrated his efforts on angling.

Mr Yeltsin's absence from Moscow has prompted many other senior Russian figures to escape the heat and dust and head for the countryside or beach. The difference this year is that all ministers and political leaders have gone to great lengths to advertise the fact that they are spending their holidays with their wives and children.

The move, according to local reports, was prompted by the dismissal of Valentin Kovalev, the former Justice Minister, who was recorded on a secret video taking part in an orgy held at a sauna frequented by Russian mobsters. Other politicians have apparently also been filmed in compromising positions. No one wants to become the next scandal victim.

Flame of Albanian unrest threatens Macedonian tinderbox

FROM JAMES PETTYFER
IN TETOVO

TENSION gripped western Macedonia yesterday with frequent roadblocks and a heavy special forces presence after an outbreak of violence which left two young ethnic Albanians dead and 40 people with serious gunshot wounds.

More than 200 people were taken to hospital after fighting broke out in the normally quiet Islamic town of Gostivar near here on Wednesday. Rudi Smali, the newly-elected radical Mayor, has been arrested and accused of inciting the violence.

About a quarter of the population of Macedonia, long regarded as the tinderbox of the southern Balkans, are ethnic Albanians, most of whom live in traditional Muslim communities in the western mountains. Since the fall of communism, the border with Albania has been opened, and links renewed. At the same time, nationalist feelings in these communities have grown.

A dispute about the right to fly the Albanian flag erupted when US-trained Macedonian special forces moved into the town with armoured vehicles at about 3am on Wednesday, surrounded the town hall, and broke into it.

Five hours later an angry Albanian crowd gathered and tried to eject them. Scuffles broke out, followed by bursts of gunfire. The Macedonian version reported on television yesterday claimed the special forces "were helping people who were being attacked by terrorists".

What is indisputable in the fog of claims and counterclaims is that Albanians also used weapons, possibly brought across the border, and that disturbances continued all day.

Although the Macedonian action has succeeded in stopping for the time being what is seen as a secessionist movement, there will be a heavy price to pay in community relations. The Albanians are sufficiently numerous to have a right of veto over the future of the state. The use of weapons by both sides must reinforce the West's fears of the spread of violence from Albania.

As far as can be established, units of the United Nations peacekeeping force based in Tetovo did not play any part in the events. Yesterday they appeared to be confined to barracks in the town.

UNSECURED PERSONAL LOANS

Interest rates from 12.3% APR you can afford to borrow more

SEE HOW WE COMPARE

Loan	Typical Example	48 Monthly Payments	Total Amount Paid	Direct Loan Saving
£5,000 Loan	£107.50	£5,160.00
£10,000 Loan	£216.33	£5,593.84
£15,000 Loan	£314.68	£5,504.84
£20,000 Loan	£412.78	£5,413.44

IF YOU ARE OVER 22 AND HAVE AN INCOME OF £10,000 OR MORE CALL FREE ON 0800 121 125

LINES OPEN 9AM-5PM WEEKDAYS 9AM-5PM SAT 10AM-4PM SUN

PLEASE QUOTE CODE 021 WHEN CALLING

Or complete the information below and send to: The Royal Bank of Scotland plc, FREEPOST, 101 Princess Street, Manchester M1 1BP (no stamp required).

Surname (Mr/Ms/Miss/Ms)

Postcode

Address

Tel. Day

Tel. Evening

Spain prays for hostage facing death deadline

FROM GILES TREMLETT IN MADRID

SPAIN is awaiting with horror the threatened murder today by the Basque separatist group Eta of a kidnapped town councillor from the Prime Minister's Popular Party.

Eta has said it will kill Miguel Angel Blanco, 29, if Jose Maria Aznar's conservative Government does not immediately bow to its demands. The separatist group wants its prisoners — there are more than 500 in Spanish jails — moved to jails in the northern Basque region.

Scholar Aznar's Government has repeatedly said it will not bow to Eta's blackmail and the demands are logistically impossible in the time-limit given: the deadline is 4pm Spanish time today.

"Eta knows its conditions are impossible," a joint statement from the Popular Party and Spain's other principal political parties said. "This is a death sentence with a deadline." The Pope appealed for the release of Señor Blanco, calling the death threat an "offence to human and Christian conscience" and "an act of terrorism". In a message to the Bishop of Bilbao, Ricardo Blázquez Pérez, citizens and church communities "reject this permanent form of violence which offends human and Christian conscience", the Pope said.

Hundreds of thousands of people took part in silent protests in town squares across Spain yesterday. Peace groups organised all-night candlelit vigils in Señor Blanco's home town of Erasm, near Bilbao, northern Spain, and in other Basque towns, to urge Eta to spare his life. Television programmes on most channels carried the symbol of a blue ribbon in one corner of the screen as a protest against Eta's action.

Police were scouring the Basque country for the young councillor and his kidnappers. Señor Blanco was abducted on Thursday after having lunch at his family's home in Erasm, where he is one of the four Popular Party councillors. He had been due to take a train to the nearby town of Elbar, where he works as a financial consultant.

Later in the afternoon an Eta representative called a Basque newspaper to say Señor Blanco had been kidnapped and would be killed if the prisoners were not moved within 48 hours.

□ Brussels: About 300 Spanish EU officials staged a "silent protest" here over the death threat. (AFP)

Blanco: Pope called on Eta to spare his life

From the bestselling author of THE ONE THAT GOT AWAY

CHRIS RYAN

The scorching new sequel to STAND BY, STAND BY

OUT NOW

CENTURY

The easy route to the Airport

National Express scheduled airport services, including Flightlink and Airlink Services, take you and your luggage direct to the heart of Britain's major airports. With over 2,000 agents nationwide, reserving a seat couldn't be easier.

See your local travel agent or for details of your nearest agent call 0990 010104

Lines open 8am-7pm 7 days a week. Ask for immediate information.

NATIONAL EXPRESS

Britain's Coach Network

Visit our interactive web site at <http://www.nationalexpress.co.uk>

LOW FARES ALL DAY EVERY DAY, FOR EXAMPLE

From	To	Flightlink / Airlink	Only	Adult Return
Birmingham	to/from Manchester	FLIGHTLINK / AIRLINK	ONLY	£10.00
Leeds	to/from Heathrow	FLIGHTLINK / AIRLINK	ONLY	£35.00
Cardiff	to/from Gatwick	FLIGHTLINK / AIRLINK	ONLY	£31.00
Bristol	to/from Heathrow	FLIGHTLINK / AIRLINK	ONLY	£24.00
Coventry	to/from Gatwick	FLIGHTLINK / AIRLINK	ONLY	£25.50

HUNDREDS MORE — CHOOSE FROM OVER 1,200 SCHEDULED DAILY DESTINATIONS

Modern coaches • ON BOARD TOILET WASHROOM • STEEL DECK SERVICE & REFRESHMENTS ON MANY JOURNEYS • CONVENIENT LOCAL PICK-UP POINTS • DISCOUNT COACHCARDS • HELPFUL FRIENDLY STAFF • COMFORTABLE • CONNECTIONS TO EUROPE

Tsarist capital emerges from Moscow's shadow with its own ideas on high and low culture

Treasure house of art offers war booty deal

WHEN President Yeltsin recently declared that St Petersburg should assert itself as Russia's cultural capital, he never expected the city to take him so seriously.

After decades of struggling to overcome Moscow's domination, the beautiful but dilapidated Tsarist capital is finally beginning to shake off its provinciality and do things its own way.

Certainly that was the message this week from Mikhail Piotrovsky, the director of the Hermitage Museum, Russia's greatest cultural treasure, who boldly entered the political minefield surrounding the fate of "trophy art".

Russia has so far steadfastly refused to return any of the estimated 200,000 art treasures plundered by Soviet troops after the Second World War. The fate of the booty, worth billions of pounds, is currently being decided by President Yeltsin, who has the final say on a Bill calling for all art treasures to be declared Russian property.

ST PETERSBURG FILE

by RICHARD BEESTON

"Frankly, the issue will never be resolved if we leave it up to the politicians," said Mr Piotrovsky, who advocates a compromise between the former belligerents. "We will never get anywhere if we have the 'I won, you lost' mentality."

Under his plan, the fate of the war booty would be negotiated over two or three years with the aim of dividing the treasures in half and making ownership final and legally binding.

"Privately many Germans have told me that they would be prepared to divide the art 50-50, and this seems to be the only fair arrangement," he said. Not surprisingly, the Hermitage would do well out of such a deal. It received several hundred priceless works from its share of the booty, including scores of French Impressionist paintings, revealed in a stunning exhibition two years ago.

The proposal, while based on the principle of compromise, is also a product of St Petersburg's more assertive attitude. The Hermitage, which once depended on shrinking government handouts for survival, now raises a third of its annual budget through fund-raising, much of it from foreign sponsors.

Similarly, while Moscow's Bolshoi Theatre is struggling to survive and maintain its sinking reputation, the Kirov's ballet and opera companies in St Petersburg have gone from strength to strength.

While it may be too early to predict the city's rehabilitation after decades of Communist neglect, a new and energetic Mayor in St Petersburg and a sharp increase in outside investment suggest that the city may be returning to its former glory.

Mikhail Piotrovsky of the Hermitage, who is offering to share war booty

Big Brother is watching your sofa

ST PETERSBURG'S best 24-hour live soap opera will come to a close next week, when fans will pay their final visit to the Simpo furniture shop and say goodbye to Sergei and Natasha.

The good-looking young couple have been the centre of attention since an advertising company offered to give them all the furniture in the shop window — worth more than £3,000 — if they became live displays for a fortnight.

Although the lavatory is out of sight and the couple's large double bed is discreetly hidden behind a screen, everything else they do is in full view of passers-by on Savushkina Street.

While attracting mild curiosity at first, the couple's activities turned into a political issue when 20 Bolsheviks picketed the shop, protesting against "this disgusting show, which debases intimate relationships and contradicts the moral standards of the Slavs".

The controversy became a sensation when it was revealed that the couple were not newlyweds, as claimed. Indeed, Sergei was married to someone else — a spectator on the street.

In spite of the disclosure, the couple stuck it out as furniture shoppers, journalists and friends streamed through their living room, testing out sofas, asking personal questions and helping themselves to cups of coffee.

Naturally, the advertisers who arranged the display are delighted and the city is already waiting for the arrival of the next couple.

New life for a baroque relic

EIGHTY years after it was appropriated by the Bolsheviks, a small corner of St Petersburg that is forever British may finally be returned to its rightful owners.

The Anglican church, situated appropriately on the English Embankment, is an 18th-century baroque masterpiece built to serve the once thriving British community, living in the then Tsarist capital of Russia.

In spite of the indifference of its

Communist owners, and the threat to its survival during the bloody siege of Leningrad by the Germans, the church has pulled through intact with the original altar, font and even the organ still in place. Although the building is currently being used as a souvenir shop, the first service in eight decades was held there last year by a Royal Navy chaplain and there are moves to retrieve it permanently.

Chorus of alarm raised in Milan over La Scala privatisation plan

18th-century operatic opulence hides the failings of La Scala's stage and orchestra pit

FROM RICHARD OWEN
IN ROME

WHEN the final production of La Scala's current opera season — an "erotic and anti-Papist" modern dress production of Puccini's Tosca — was booted this month, Paolo Arca, the artistic director at the Milan opera house, said the whistles and catcalls were "at least a sign that our productions still invoke passion and emotion".

But as La Scala takes a summer break before returning with Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor in the autumn, there are growing fears for its future, despite an ambitious "Scala 2001" scheme to renovate its 18th-century home and reorganise its finances. Riccardo Muti, the celebrated conductor and La Scala's musical director, noted that the "inadequacies" of the theatre's stage, orchestra pit and backstage facilities meant that quality was "bound to suffer".

Asked by La Repubblica about plans to restore the theatre to its 1778 glory for the millennium, Signor Muti said he hoped the "La Scala 2001" project would not become bogged down in an endless series of bureaucratic wrangles, making it "not so much La Scala 2001 as the operatic equivalent of 2001, A Space Odyssey". The paper commented that, if La Scala did not put its house in order, Muti might "pack his bags".

The decision to renovate La Scala follows the introduction of more stringent safety regulations after disastrous fires at the Petruzzelli opera house at Bari and La Fenice opera house in Venice. The board of La Scala recently voted to move to a new auditorium in the depressed "post-industrial" suburb of La Bicocca, in northeast Milan, on the site of a former Pirelli tyre factory. This would allow Piermarini's great baroque theatre in the centre of Milan to be refitted and upgraded.

But an investigation into "irregularities" over the award of La Bicocca's building contract has held up the project, and the proposed 2,500-seat auditorium is still on the drawing board. Carlo Fontana, La Scala's Superintendent, has described the situation as "an emergency", vowing not to leave the present site without a guarantee that the orchestra and chorus will be back "well in time for January 2001".

Signor Fontana and the theatre management are meanwhile pinning their hopes on a scheme for partial privatisation of La Scala. Under a radical plan provisionally approved by the board last month, the state would continue to provide half the annual £50 million budget, but a consortium of banks and companies — including Pirelli — would provide badly needed investment.

In a move which has shocked some more traditionally minded opera patrons, the private investors have also offered to generate profit-making ideas, including the marketing of La Scala products to cash in on its reputation.

IRELAND.

IF YOU WANT TO HALVE THE TIME, JUMP ON A JET.

Now you can think of Ireland by ferry as nothing more than a quick hop. Because with the jet-propelled Stena Line HSS at your service, you're just 99 minutes from the Emerald Isle. It is, indeed, the world's largest fast ferry. It accommodates 1,500 passengers and 375 cars with space and comfort; it offers a choice of bars, restaurants, shopping, movies, games and children's play areas. And, all the while, it surges through the water at 40 knots with the smoothest possible ride. Coupled with the equally speedy Stena Lynx and our Superferries, Stena Line gives you more routes, more ships and more sailings to Ireland than any other ferry company. And Standard Return Fares start from as little as £32* per person based on 5 passengers in a car. To book contact your Travel Agent or call 0990 70 70 70. *Selected Superferry sailings Fishguard-Rosslare

The next generation of ferry company.

هناك امه الاصل

A bit of bumme

Philip Howard

■ Foxhunting is a dull ride, an excuse to be rude, and a jolly good read

Habeas corpus is not so fundamental a human right as habeas corpus. We have made cockfighting, trial by ordeal and prizefighting illegal without completely destroying our liberties won by Magna Carta. The best argument against hunting is its cruelty. The best argument for letting Yockies Tallyho "Whoop-oop, at him Hannibal" gallop on is that the State should not ban activities unless they cause real public nuisance or offence. I would prohibit hare-coursing: the hare is a beautiful creature which screams pitifully when caught, and is already doomed by the pesticides and fertilisers of rapacious grain barons.

Class war has been part of hunting since the Norman aristos made pouncing a capital offence. The man on the horse looks down on the pedestrian, and the man on foot looks up at the horseman with mutual suspicion. To kill a fox by any method other than the approved one — of hunting it with hounds and on horseback — is regarded as little better than criminal. And to misuse hunting terminology, for example by calling hounds "dogs" or a "pink" coat red, is to betray not merely laughable ignorance but also shameful evidence of ill-breeding. While I was walking in the Borders, a fox ran into a drain. Shortly afterwards a huntress from the Duke of Buccleuch's rode up side-saddle, in full monte of bowler, veil and skin-tight jodhpurs. Daphne: "Did the fox come this way?" PH, surprised into betrayal: "It went down that drain." Daphne, with withering scorn: "You mean it went to ground."

Nevertheless, the countryside made a touching sight in Hyde Park, especially those who had driven there from Brown's Hotel in their Rollers and dressed down for the occasion. There are more foxes in Hyde Park now than there are in the Shire parishes. Hounds are lovely dogs, unless you are a fox. And on foxhunting I am an agnostic. There must be more important things for Government to do than ban it. And hunting will naturally fade away anyway, because of intensive farming. Hunters no longer charge like cavalry through open country. They spend most of their time sitting in queues like motorists in a tailback.

But an extensive and peculiar genre of literature will fade away with hunting. What would be left of traditional ballads if you took away the horse and the hound from their haunting, hunting verses? Hunting was a stock topic of the earliest poetry, from Odysseus's tell-tale scar and the labours of Hercules. English literature begins with Beowulf hunting the monster Grendel in East Anglian fens and carries on with Sir Gawain, whose fits (or chapters) conclude with the first of the huntin' and bonkin' novels. Hunting runs through the works of the Stratford boy, Theseus: "My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind, so flew'd, so sanded; and their heads are hung; With ears that sweep away the morning dew." Siegfried Sassoon satirised the horrors of war beside the absurdity of foxhunting.

Sport, because it excites intense transient emotion, is a field for poetry. Cricket and golf make popular poetry, because they are so complicated. Running and throwing the discus make poetry, because they are simple. But hunting has made more poetry than all of them. John Masfield is one of the Poet Laureates who did hunting, at length, in Reynard the Fox. "The fox knew well that, before they tore him, they should try their speed on the downs before him," Masfield was prudent to let the fox escape by going to earth at the end. Even those who consider horses thicker creatures than their worshippers can thrill to Stubbs, especially Whistler's keen with a bubble saying: "How much longer do I have to hold this pose?" down a long corridor at the National Gallery. Surtees with Jorrocks and Mr Sponser's Sporting Tour gave Dickens the pattern for Pickwick. Esmond Haddock won a bride and freedom from aunts by his spirited rendering of "A huntin' we will go". Dame Juliana Barnes, the suspect author of The Book of St Albans, gave English its rich notion of assemblage from the venerable or hunting game, such as a scoop of reporters or a slant of journalists. Blow all the rudeness and snobbery. Pity the plume, but forget the dying bird. Hunting is batty but primal. And though it now makes a dull ride, it is still a good read.

Accused of muddling through, Lord Irvine insists Labour's most ambitious programme is still on track

My pivotal role in the constitutional revolution

Only one major political party believes that our constitution stands in need of change at all. The Tories in government scaled new heights of complacency in defending the status quo. It was as if our constitution had been a jewel so beyond improvement that we had reached the end of history. The Conservatives paid the price of being ejected from office by the electorate after 18 years of increasingly autocratic, remote and secretive government. They lost the trust of the people and, in the process, undermined public confidence in our democratic institutions.

This Government was elected on a pledge to restore faith in democracy. We have embarked on the most ambitious and extensive programme of constitutional reform and modernisation this century. It is aimed at restoring the British people's trust in government and building a constitution fit for the next century. We will govern with a new spirit of openness. We will enter into a partnership with the people, governing by consent and seeking to fashion consensus in a way that is both honest and accountable.

Power has been concentrated in the hands of too few people at the top. We want to restore more freedom to local communities and bring power closer to the people by devolving power away from the centre to Scotland, Wales, London and, where there is a clear demand, to the English regions. We will incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into United Kingdom law to bring these rights home and allow our people access to them in their national courts. And we will introduce a Freedom of Information Act to give people the right to know what government is doing in their name.

Open and accountable government and freedom of information are the lifeblood of a modern and secure democracy. A culture of secrecy flourished under the Tories. Instead of the soft option of putting an existing code of practice into statute, we are engaged on a root-and-branch review of every issue. It is right that we should take the time necessary to achieve a proper solution, through a careful synthesis of political input to the process of the Whitehall machine. The Government also believes that a vital and effective House of Commons is central to the revival of public confidence in politics and public life. We are committed to modernising the way Parliament works, and proposals for the handling of legislation are already before the select committee concerned. After that, the Government will turn to the composition and role of the House of Lords, which we are determined to make more representative.

So, this is a wide-ranging and extensive programme. But Peter Riddell need have no fear that the programme is piecemeal, or that its interconnections are not being thought through. Back in March this year we published a joint report with the Liberal Democrats, setting out a coherent and detailed programme for constitutional reform.

Before the general election, the Labour manifesto gave a complete picture of our policies and the thinking which binds them together. As soon as we were in Government, the Prime Minister convened a Cabinet committee with responsibility for constitutional reform policy, for the very reason that we need to consider the whole picture and to ensure that our programme maintains its coherence. And there can be no question of a lack of detailed consideration being given to each strand of the programme. I currently chair three separate committees, on devolution, freedom of information and incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights, working through the detail of our proposals.

An important reason for my pivotal role as chairman of all three of these committees is to ensure that we do think through the implications of each of our reforms and get the linkages right. We recognise the importance of ensuring mutual compatibility between the various elements of our programme. Introducing freedom of information, for example, must achieve consistency with the incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights. By legislating to ensure that those affected by administrative decisions are always given reasons, we will demonstrate that the convention is a basic floor of human rights, not a ceiling. On devolution, the immediate media focus is on the Scottish and Welsh referendums. But our proposals are designed to be viewed in the round. We are committed to offering London a similar opportunity and, in time, the English regions. The establishment of statutory Regional Development Agencies, announced in the Queen's Speech, is the first step towards making government more accountable in the regions of England.

Our programme is highly ambitious and cannot be achieved all at once. We make no apology for that, and have always said it should proceed step by step. Peter Riddell is right when he says that the Prime Minister does not want to unbalance the legislative programme. We were elected on a manifesto that promised action across every area of government: on education, health, law and order and, of course, the economy. Constitutional renewal must be balanced with these other important commitments.

Parliament will have every opportunity to consider our proposals. We cannot be responsible for the Tories' unwillingness to engage in constructive debate about modernising the British constitution. For the Government's part, we are making every effort to ensure that the issues are fully debated. Over the next few months we will be publishing White Papers on Scottish and Welsh devolution, freedom of information and incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights. There will also be a Green Paper on proposals for a Greater London authority. There can be no question of a lack of attention to detail or proper consultation. There will be full debate on each step of the constitutional reform programme, both within Parliament and outside, as we are currently witnessing on our devolution proposals.

Rather than stifling debate, this measured and sensible approach allows more time for planning and implementation and increases the opportunities for debate about the constitution as a whole.

Peter Riddell accuses the Government of muddling through on constitutional reform. But in the same breath, he accepts that "we are moving from being subjects to becoming citizens with defined rights", acknowledging one of the central themes binding Labour's programme together. We are delivering power to the people, balancing rights and responsibilities, and restoring confidence in our constitution.

Lord Irvine of Lairg is Lord Chancellor of Great Britain.

The Governor, treason and plot

Was Chris Patten the victim of a Foreign Office conspiracy?

I left Hong Kong ten days ago and swore enough was enough. A chapter of empire had ended in a deluge of rain and overexposure. No more. The story was done.

I must recall, Jonathan Dimbleby's book on Chris Patten, The Last Governor, published today, contains allegations against British ministers and officials as astonishing as anything in recent imperial history. They amount to a charge of treason. The book was written on the basis of five years' close contact with Mr Patten, who is quoted at length, and his team at Government House. It is the argument for Mr Patten, lock, but a stock and devastating barrel. He is at present in Hawaii, seething with anger. I understand that documents showing what he regards as duplicity among his predecessors were uncovered as recently as during his departure from Government House. He wants a full parliamentary inquiry.

After reading the book, I imagine its cast of villains would agree, if only to clear their names. According to Patten-Dimbleby, a freemasonry of British diplomats and associates decided in the 1980s that the "Ming vase" of Hong Kong should be handed over to Beijing in 1997 undamaged by democracy, even if this meant dissembling to the people of Hong Kong and suppressing calls for colonial self-government. From the moment that Parliament called for a democratic administration in Hong Kong in 1984, the Foreign Office fought any such proposal. It was obsessed with staying in Beijing's good books.

Dimbleby charts private contacts immediately after Tiananmen Square (in defiance of a world boycott) and secret "winks and nods". After Mr Patten's appointment, Sir Percy Cradock, the former supremo of Britain's Hong Kong policy, became a roving "disloyal opposition" to the Governor. He visited Beijing behind the Governor's back and liaised with Communist officials in Hong Kong. Most galling for Mr Patten was the knowledge that those denouncing him in London as misguided and incompetent were eagerly seeking business from the notoriously corrupt Beijing regime.

These charges, quoted by Dimbleby from a senior public servant against his colleagues, are serious. I first joined the Hong Kong debate on Sir Percy's side. I could see the force of his argument that the Chinese regime was, as he once put it, "a bunch of thugs" who would turn Hong Kong into a wasteland if not handled properly. Democracy was a distraction. Hong Kong diplomacy post-1984 had to be that of surrender disguised as dignified retreat. To Sir Percy there was no alternative.

The British Government wanted an alternative and sent Mr Patten out to pursue it. He sought a more democratic regime prior to the handover, gambling that China would not ordain the wasteland strategy. We could have left any colony in the world Cradock-fashion, entrusting it to the most potent neighbour in the nicest possible terms. The frontline states could have been given to South Africa. The Falklands could have gone to Argentina. Yet in each case, Britain felt an obligation to ideological as well as civil order, whatever later befell.

The difference in Hong Kong was that the colony was rich and that wealth required Chinese acquiescence. When the time came for handover talks in 1984, an onset of British liberal conscience threatened that acquiescence. The Hong Kong establishment was horrified. Foreign Office Sinologists in the 1980s, like their Arabist brothers, showed their machismo by their attachment to the deeper philosophies of their adopted land. To them Hong Kong was not a colony thirsty for autonomy but a Chinese merchant city under brief British trusteeship. Ruling Hong Kong was none of Britain's business, or rather it was business and nothing else. Levering China was unthinkable. When Mr Patten sought "any democratic elbow room I could find", the Sinologists were appalled.

Mr Patten emerges from this book not as the ambitious pop-jay of Foreign Office lore. He was naive and inexperienced, but he was also dumfounded at the defeatism towards China of those who claimed to have Hong Kong's interests at heart. Worse, many of his new enemies were old friends. Against him were Lord Howe of Aberavon and Lord Young of Gifford (both for Cable and Wireless), Lord Prior (for GEC), Michael Heseltine (for the DTI) and the massed diplomatic establishment. There were ambassadors and former governors, MPs and bankers. Did none of them believe in democracy and self-government? Would they not join Mr Patten in a crusade to which they and the West had been committed for half a century, to install democratic rights wherever in the world they could?

1974: Howe announces the deal with China. 1997: Patten bites his lip as the handover begins

1974: Howe announces the deal with China. 1997: Patten bites his lip as the handover begins

Apparently not. Mr Patten's only allies throughout were Douglas Hurd and John Major himself. Lord Hurd of Westwell could not understand his predecessor, Lord Howe, wanting deals with Beijing to be kept secret from Hong Kong's local leaders. Lord Prior, Lord Young and Sir Charles Powell could beat a path to the Governor's door, pleading for him to soften his proposals in the interests of their companies. Lord Young even assured the Governor that the "vast majority" of Hong Kong people were "entirely unpolitical" (a million had demonstrated against Tiananmen). Otherwise liberal men had their heads turned by the prospect of Chinese gold, as had the 19th-century opium cartels. Britain could not be fastidious in the face of the great god trade.

Mr Patten was to learn the might of this god. On the Court of Appeal, on the new airport, on visas, on extending the franchise, he was without friends the moment he crossed China. He finds that the Foreign Office has already surrendered points he thought he was still negotiating. Diplomats soothe Beijing's anguish when a Hong Kong opinion poll supports democracy. When the Governor tries to stop a Cradock mission to China, briefed by the Foreign Office against him, he is ignored. This book portrays a lonely defender of an outpost long ceded to the enemy, with friendly fire falling all around him.

Yet Mr Patten had his way. Certainly, his half-democratic legislature has been disbanded, replaced by one to Beijing's liking. But that does not mean the democratic route should never have been tried. Not even the smoothest Sinologist could have suppressed Martin Lee and his allies in the Democracy Movement for five more years after 1992. Mr Patten co-opted them. As a result, Hong Kong passed to China as a more mature and cautious political community.

There has been none of Sir Percy's predicted chaos. The business community accused Mr Patten of ruining them. He overruled them, yet they have not been ruined. To put it mildly, some of them might stop on the way to the bank to offer him an apology. If the rich are richer than ever, it is thanks to his policy, against theirs. Hong Kong may not be a democracy, but it has had a taste of one.

That is the argument of this remarkable book. Mr Patten's accusation, via Dimbleby, is that his foes deceived Parliament, conspired to cheat six million people of their rights and used political influence for commercial gain. Worse, when British territory was at risk after Tiananmen Square, they were conspiring with the enemy. Perhaps, as the cynic says, treason is a matter of dates. But let us hear the dates. If the dignity with which Britain left Hong Kong last week is to survive, these charges should be answered.

Have faith

MUEZZINS' cries and Buddhist chants will be ringing through the House of Commons if Donald Gorrie, the Liberal Democrat MP for Edinburgh West, succeeds in his plan to make the opening prayers said every day in the Commons multi-denominational.

"OK Mildred, I believe you. I'll buy you a fishing rod."

He is tabling an early day motion this week to get things moving, and claims the support of most of his party and many across the House.

The current form is for the Speaker's Anglican chaplain, Canon Donald Gray, to read a set number of prayers from the Book of Common Prayer for five minutes each day before the beginning of House business. The format has hardly changed since the Restoration.

Until now, "The Common Prayer Book prayers don't do much for me," says Gorrie, an elder in the Church of Scotland. "The words are the same every day. If we had a rota of ministers of all religions, we could have brand new prayers every day read out in different languages. It would be rather stimulating to start the day with Arabic or Hebrew." Canon Gray would maintain his pastoral duties but would have to wait his turn beside the Rabbis and Plymouth Brethren in the prayer rota.

Despite the modish feel to the idea, for some it smacks of the paralytically correct. Thought for the Day slot on Radio 4's Today programme. "The Church of England prayers are dignified and beautiful," says Lord St John of Fawley, a former Leader of the House. "I can't imagine they'll get away with this." Canon Gray sounded too gloomy to comment.

DIARY

Top hole

THRILLING news for foreign fans of P.G. Wodehouse: Norman Murphy, Wodehouse scholar, is preparing a concordance to the master's works. "I got the idea while giving a lecture in Texas," says Murphy, who, with his tommy-gun delivery and floppy dark hair, looks like a useful nabber of policemen's helmets, "when someone asked me what was a collar-stud and what were spats."

Beyond the sartorial, Murphy hopes to parse the various popular sayings, advertising jingles and songs which Wodehouse would drop in to his works. "Wodehouse used the Bible and the Book of Common Prayer a great deal," says Murphy, "but two lines in a popular song from New York in 1900 can be a devil to find." Perhaps most excitingly, Murphy promises to reveal the identity of the inspiration for Lord Emsworth. "It's eluded me for 30 years," he says. "You must wait for the book to find out."

William Hague's campaign to bring the average age of Tory Members down from 62 to below his own age has received a boost from Hague's own fiercely ambitious PPS, David Lidington, the MP for Aylesbury. On Tuesday his wife gave birth to twins, Edward and James, who are already on the list of prospective future members of Lidington's local party.

Red hot

CONGRATULATIONS to Jeanette Winterson, the novelist and critic, who has just sold her first screenplay. It is an adaptation of her own novel from 1987, The Passion. The buyer is Miramax, the brash American film company behind the blood-strewn works of Quentin Tarantino. Fortunately it has experience of more highbrow stuff, having also poured money into The English Patient.

Doug Henderson, the Minister for Europe, is paying a price for his attention to his physical well-being. Each morning he goes jogging through St James's Park. When he returns to the Foreign Office, however, where he has an office overlooking the Durbar Court, he has terrible trouble getting into the building. His problem? He has nowhere to keep his security pass in his running kit.

Winterson: in the money

Tum trouble

TOO much globetrotting and summits, not to mention trying to keep up with President Clinton, has had its effect on the waistslines of the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary. Guests at Robin Cook's party in the Foreign Office on Thursday evening confirmed that he was looking "portly".

The PM, meanwhile, once an enthusiastic exerciser, is now reduced to a few sets of tennis on Saturday mornings at RAF Halton near Chesham. He is thickening conspicuously around the waist as a result. The impression is made worse by a new light-grey, Neil Hamilton-style suit he has bought. "His trousers have begun to swoop under his tummy," (a common effect depicted in any diagram).

Downing Street, however, is keen to assert the PM's vigour. "I think that anyone who can travel 26,000 miles and go to four summits in the first few weeks of office cannot have a fitness problem." Says one of Blair's spokesmen. How about lessening regular details of Blair's weight and cholesterol levels, as the White House does for Clinton? The Downing Street telephone went dead.

Blair: corporation taxed

P.H.S

هناك امه الاصل

AN OMINOUS DELAY

Are ministers already losing their taste for openness?

There was a pretty irony in yesterday's programme for Parliament. As MPs debated "the information society", with a minister making worthy noises about the "important social as well as economic dimensions to the information revolution", the Government admitted that its White Paper on Freedom of Information was not to be published this month, but would have to be delayed until the autumn.

Ministers indignantly denied reports that civil servants had been holding them up. If officials have indeed been speedy on this issue, that would in itself be a surprise. Whitehall is famous for its culture of secrecy. In this department more than any other. "Yes, minister" is liable to mutate into "Not yet, minister" and, eventually, "Are you really sure, minister?". A long enough delay, they might hope, could help to dent the enthusiasm that politicians felt about freedom of information in the autumn.

But no, we are told, it is the ministers' own fault that the White Paper is not ready to be published. The timetable that they imposed on themselves was too tight. They have not been able to devote enough time to scrutinising the draft that officials have prepared, based on a speech that Tony Blair gave in Opposition. Other issues, they say, have been given higher priority.

This could be an ominous sign. First, we were led to expect a Freedom of Information Bill in the first parliamentary session. Then it was bumped off the list, with the promise of an early White Paper, followed by a draft Bill. Now the early White Paper has turned into a late White Paper. Conspiracy theorists might legitimately suspect that ministers have already been captured by their office.

For this would not be the first time that the best of intentions have paved the road to inaction. In 1974, the last time that an incoming Labour Government had the chance to enact a manifesto pledge to bring in freedom of information, the idea was quietly dropped. At each election since then, the same promise has been made. Now at last it can be enacted. But will it?

The case is stronger now than ever before. The last Government, tainted by the machinations uncovered by the Scott inquiry, made an attempt to open up Whitehall. But the code was weak, and public faith in the workings of government remained low. This Government is passionate about modernisation: what better candidate than the one institution left almost untouched by the Thatcherite and Majorite reforms of the 1980s and 1990s?

Labour's claim that there has been too little time to consider this matter rings hollow. The party has had 18 years of Opposition, 23 years since it first undertook to take action. In the meantime, there have been Private Member's Bills, hours of parliamentary debate and endless seminars on the subject. Mr Blair himself is sensitive to the dangers of temptation to dilute once in power. At a Campaign for Freedom of Information awards ceremony last year, he said: "People often say to me today, 'Everyone says this before they get into power, then after they get into power...' I actually believe that if we want to make government effective in the modern world, it simply is not possible to do that on the basis of Government just handing down tablets of stone."

All the more reason, then, for his administration to make this a high priority. Many Bills conceived in haste are repented at leisure. But freedom of information is one of the few issues best tackled quickly, before ministers start to enjoy the power that secrecy affords them. If it is not a high priority now, it ought to be.

THE MANDELA EFFECT

South Africa remains on the road to reconciliation

One year after his triumphant state trip, Nelson Mandela has been a welcome visitor to Britain again this week. For part of his three-day tour he has played the role of consort to Grace Machel who received an honorary degree from Essex University on Thursday. Yesterday Mr Mandela spoke in his own right at Oxford. The South Africa to which he returns has made steady progress since he appeared with Betty Boobrowd at the Palace of Westminster and walked with the Prince of Wales in Brighton market.

Much of the credit for this lies with the President himself — the symbol of his country both at home and abroad. He is now within a week of his 79th birthday and two years from political retirement. He has gradually transferred his duties to Thabo Mbeki, his Deputy President and probable successor. In an African context, the willingness of a leader both to serve only a limited period of office and to share authority while doing so is unique. The means by which Mr Mandela relinquishes power may prove as important to South African democracy as the manner in which he left prison.

The Mandela presidency has been devoted to the theme of reconciliation: not only between races but within them. The most pressing issue facing South Africa after the move to majority rule in 1994 was the violent division between supporters of the ANC and Chief Buthe's Inkatha Freedom Party (IFP). Their rivalry had left more than 12,000 dead in KwaZulu/Natal, and rendered that province, South Africa's largest, all but ungovernable. Until recently the ANC regarded the IFP as an entirely illegitimate force, simply created for the convenience of apartheid. The tentative agreement between the two camps represents an astonishing transformation in their relationship.

Tensions between black and white South Africans, although visible, have also eased. The task of raising the living standards of the poor majority while reassuring the remaining wealthier minority was destined to involve difficulties. In certain areas, notably education, where the colour division in the quality of facilities enjoyed is especially stark, maintaining a national consensus has proved arduous. Nonetheless, the "white flight" that at one stage threatened to become a stampede has abated.

In large degree this is because the business community has stayed. That in turn reflects increased confidence in the country's future. The ANC was elected on a hopelessly impractical economic platform that it has progressively abandoned. Outside investors have been reassured by the programme that emerged in its place. The last South African budget included cuts in spending, taxation and borrowing. Exchange controls were relaxed further. The telecommunications industry became the first partial privatisation this spring. A Finance Minister once associated with Marxism produced the sort of package many in the City of London urged on Gordon Brown.

Law and order — easily the most pressing domestic problem — remains a major impediment to South Africa's prospects. Criminal violence has risen at the same time as political violence has fallen. That reflects the easy availability of offensive weaponry. The fear this engenders also has a destructive effect on trade and tourism. Reversing that trend is the most significant task of Mr Mandela's remaining tenure. Despite that, three years on, the ambition of a "rainbow nation" retains real substance as well as a compelling image. That is certainly what Mr Mandela would want as his legacy.

THE FRAGRANT ANGLER

Taut lines, midge cream and pheromones for the best fishers

Izaak Walton, the patron saint of fishing, declared that he was a brother of the angler. But today, as compulsively as trout to mayfly, the question rises whether there can also be sisters of the angler. For Des Taylor is writing about women and fishing again in Angling Times. And for "the voice of anglers" women are as welcome as cormorants on the riverbank or mink in the salmon river. According to him, women chatter about things other than fish and fishing. They let their children run riot, they embarrass male anglers while they are at their swearing, exaggeration and other macho activities, and their very sex distracts fishermen from their proper function.

While Mr Taylor was giving his new gloss on coarse fishing, Johnny Briggs was taking a swing at women golfers. Mr Briggs is the actor who plays Mike Baldwin in Coronation Street, a character famous for his uncouth opinions. So to slice soap opera into the real rough, he described women golfers as treacherous and an abomination on the course, and compared them to cockroaches. Now Mr Briggs's former wife says: "He thinks women should be in the kitchen cooking his dinner and then get ready in bed wearing a long nightie."

These majestically politically incorrect views do not represent the considered opinion of the four million people in Britain who admit to fishing regularly or the rather fewer who claim to play golf. They reinforce the image of fishing as a jerk on one end of a line waiting for another jerk at the other.

and of golf as an insult to lawns. They are factually wrong. In Finland yesterday the European ladies team championship, Scotland took a vice-like grip on their match against England. Half a world away in Sapporo, Japan, other choice and mistress lady golfers were competing for 50 million yen.

Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother is the most celebrated fisherwoman. And the record for the king of game fish, the salmon, is still held by Miss G. W. Ballantine for the 64-pounder she landed from the Tay in 1922. Fishwives have a reputation for fishermanly invective. And Shakespeare made Cleopatra call for her angle to go fishing. But then he also had her playing billiards 15 centuries before that clubman's ballgame was invented. And the traditional virtues required for both fishing and golf — patience, calm, precision, neatness, unflappability — are not exclusively masculine.

It is no more persuasive to ban women from fishing than to say that sitting on a damp bank or hacking in an inescapable bunker necessarily make a man a curmudgeon. Many male fishers and golfers show almost feminine grace in adversity. And in the fertile folklore of fishing, some say that fish are attracted by female pheromones. It is possible that this week's outbursts are the first recorded examples of pheromone rage. In any case, there are still plenty of lonely banks and roughs for the solitary fisher king to escape to from his troubles, and from the company of either sex.

'Unfair' to assume guilt of Serbs

From Sir Alfred Sherman

Sir, While congratulating you and your fellows in the British media on giving fair showing to both sides in the controversy over the hunting of forces, I regret that not the slightest trace of this fairness has been shown (reports, July 11) towards the hunting of Serb patriots by Nato occupation forces in Bosnia and the Marches (Krajina).

For centuries now the Orthodox Christian Serbs have been subjected to genocide, enforced conversion (to Islam or Western Christianity) and ethnic cleansing by the most reactionary forces — Islam, the Western Church and German imperialism, now reinforced by the hegemonism of the United States.

No one is allowed a word on their defence. A new weapon, "induced war-crime", has been invented to circumvent that age-old dictum of innocence until guilt is proven. Now, as with socialist show-trials, indictment is taken as automatically equivalent to guilt. Think of the further potential ramifications.

Yours faithfully,
ALFRED SHERMAN,
14 Malvern Court,
Oxlow Square, SW7,
July 11.

From Mr Adam Hibbert

Sir, Whether or not one supports the UN's rather selective crusade against "war criminals" (leading article, July 11), it would seem prudent to remember that the norms of justice require a due process of evidence and judgment before the summary execution of untried suspects; that even with The Hague inquisition's blinkers it has been impossible to avoid the recognition that all sides in the war were driven to extremes; and that even if we were underestimating the scale of atrocity in Bosnia, there can be no justification for drawing parallels with the Holocaust, a comparison that reduces the lessons of the latter to a trite caution against tribal bickering.

Yours,
ADAM HIBBERT,
21 Hillfield Avenue, NE,
July 11.

Island economy

From Mr Jonathan Tolson

Sir, Mr Robert Young (letter, July 7; see also letter, July 11) asks why the economic miracle, if it is that, of Hong Kong has not been repeated here.

At least part of the answer may lie in the very different situation to be seen in the British dependency of St Helena. Hong Kong happened because of its adjacency to the mainland of China and the burgeoning economies of the Pacific Rim. Britain was probably as good a colonial ruler as any other would have been, but it was the emigrants from China who came to the fore in the last three decades who made it happen.

So how goes St Helena? Very poorly, it would appear, as there seems to be a distinct lack of interest in its prospects now it has served its purpose as a maritime staging-post and it has no adjacency or natural resource to exploit.

If the British want to show the international audience what can and should be done to improve an island economy then surely St Helena should have a Governor who will roll up his or her sleeves to work for the St Helenians as a chief executive, to argue their corner and lead the island to a viable and democratic future. Assuming Mr Patten doesn't want another turn, might there be someone who became available on May 1 to take on the task?

Yours faithfully,
JONATHAN TOLSON,
Ford Hollow Farm,
Withiel Florey, Minehead, Somerset.

Hong Kong diplomacy

From Sir Alexander Waddell

Sir, I was astonished to read Mr Andrew Stuart's description of those who preceded Lord Maclellan as Governor of Hong Kong as a "succession of particularly dim colonialists" (letter, July 7).

It so happens that, as a member of HM Colonial Service, I had the privilege of serving at various times in the Pacific and Far East with those so maligned. Sir Alexander Grantham was Governor of Hong Kong 1947-1957, Sir Robert Black 1958-64 and Sir David Trench 1964-71, which must be the "succession" to which Mr Stuart refers so disparagingly.

All were men of the highest ability and outstanding administrators with wide experience in other territories as well as in Hong Kong. Each in turn presided over the tremendous economic and social advances in Hong Kong following the devastation of the Second World War, leading to the economic "superstate" of recent years. It is regrettable, and to me distasteful, that Mr Stuart, a diplomat, should have seen fit to describe these officers, distinguished in the service they gave in war as in peace, in such terms, and in effect to disparage the administrations of which they were the head.

Yours faithfully,
A. N. A. WADDELL,
Pilgrim Cottage,
Ashton Keynes, Wiltshire,
July 7.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

1 Pennington Street, London E1 9XN Telephone 0171-782 5000

Abbey restoration: is it craft or art?

From Mr James Dunnnett

Sir, Restoration work at Westminster Abbey over the past few years has been carried out to a high level of craftsmanship. But with the commission of carved statuary for the principal portals, the question arises of when craft should give way to art.

The 14 niches around the west entrance of the Abbey — the principal entrance on state ceremonial occasions and for the public on a daily basis — have been empty at least since 1654, and there is no evidence that they were ever filled.

They were recut by Hawksmoor in the early 18th century, but remained empty until the four flanking niches were filled by statues of the Virtues three years ago.

Preparatory models have now been made to fill the remaining ten niches with lifelike figures of 20th-century martyrs, including Dietrich Bonhoeffer and Archbishop Romero of San Salvador. This work is in the hands of the firm of conservation contractors in Cambridge who were responsible for the Virtues.

Such a commission would, in times gone by, have been the summit of the career of a Ghiberti or a Donatello. Without wishing to detract from the professional and conscientious work of the contractors, is an artist not required?

The present divorce between artists and craftsmen is much to be regretted, but to erect sculpture without the vitality that only an artist can bring is to risk the deadness eloquently deplored by William Morris in the case of the north portal of the Abbey more than a century ago.

The proposed figures should be capable of standing comparison with those on the west front of Wells or Exeter, or even Chartres. That there are sculptors today capable of such a task, as Epstein or Frink might have been, is not impossible. Until they are found, the niches had arguably best remain empty.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES DUNNETT,
James Dunnnett Architects,
142 Barnsbury Road, N1,
July 8.

Countryside rally

From Dr Clive Layton

Sir, Today I attended the Countryside rally in Hyde Park. There I met 100,000 other people.

No one was hurt, no property was vandalised: these gentle people were expressing their desire for their way of life to be understood and tolerated.

Your leading article, "Rural marchers", this morning was correct in stating that hyperbole has no place in the arguments in favour of continuing hunting. But surely we must draw a line between, on the one hand, expressing disapproval, displeasure or even disgust at an activity indulged in and enjoyed by many others and, on the other hand, making criminals of a substantial proportion of our population.

Do our urban neighbours really want that? Is it right that those of us who live in the countryside and participate in country sports, and, in some cases, have families who have done so for generations, should be told that these activities are criminal? I have friends and neighbours whose whole lives might, if Mr Michael Foster's Bill is enacted, be deemed to have revolved around a criminal activity. How divisive can we become?

This is not an argument either for or against hunting. It is a strong argument against replacing the power of discussion and persuasion by the heavy hand of the law.

If our urban compatriots, and indeed some of our rural ones, feel so strongly then by all means come and argue the case. Open debate, friendly and peaceful persuasion are valid tactics and, who knows, the result may not be so easily foreseen.

Probation supervision

From the Assistant Chief Probation Officer of Essex Probation Service

Sir, The Home Office report on the number of convicted criminals being charged with murder or serious offences while under the supervision of probation officers (details, July 2), places the Probation Service in a very difficult position. Publicising its work with dangerous offenders runs the risk of unjustifiably raising the fear of crime in an already alarmed public. On the other hand, the Probation Service should not be defensive.

The harsh truth is that virtually all high-risk offenders, who are already known to the courts, police, prisons and psychiatric services, come to the Probation Service at some stage. They are released on licence from the prisons, for example, whether they get parole or not. Those whom the Parole Board consider too risky or dangerous to give parole will be released eventually and passed straight to the Probation Service.

Offenders who are severely mentally disordered are still put on probation inappropriately by the courts.

As old as you feel

From Mr J. W. Scott

Sir, By describing Camilla Parker Bowles, aged 49, as being "in late middle-age", Jane Shilling (article, July 8) may be betraying the number of her own years, since middle-age is, throughout life, always about ten years older than you are yourself. I am slightly older than Mrs Parker Bowles and, from my own viewpoint, she has yet to reach even early middle-age.

However, if middle-age is also defined as the time when you have either achieved your every ambition or come to terms with the fact that you will not do so, then I think that Jane Shilling herself, judging by the tone of her article, would agree that the phrase was inappropriate.

Yours faithfully,
JONATHAN SCOTT,
Merton Grange, Wheelers Lane,
Bearwood, Bournmouth, Dorset.

Weekend Money letters, page 41

Letters may be faxed to 0171-782 5046.
e-mail to: letters@the-times.co.uk

A real devotion to virtual pets

From Mrs Nicola Kenny

Sir, I, too, have fallen into the trap of thinking the Tamagotchi "cyber pet" was the answer to all my problems (letter, July 7; see also letters, July 8). Not having the time to devote to cats, dogs, rabbits, etc, I actively encouraged my two children to have cyber pets.

I now find myself taking both pets to work (they are forbidden at school) where, in between answering telephones, typing, etc, I have to feed, discipline, play and look after them.

The beeping has caused chaos in the office, with people running around looking for mobile phones. The worry about "killing" one while the children are at school has put years on my life.

Yours faithfully,
N. KENNY,
16 Pyotts Copse,
Old Basing, Basingstoke, Hampshire,
July 10.

From Mrs L. C. J. Aldwinckle

Sir, Some children at the junior school where I am a secretary secretly bring their electronic pets to school. If discovered, a Tamagotchi is confiscated and sent to the office for safe keeping until going-home time.

Should I look after them or not? School rules forbid both animals and electronic games but it is hard to shut the desk drawer on a virtual menagerie, electronically indicating the imminence of its virtual expiry.

I am proud to say that none has died yet.

Yours faithfully,
LUCY ALDWINCKLE,
107 Woodwarde Road, SE22.

From Mr Philip A. R. James

Sir, At my daughter's school there is a thriving Tamagotchi babysitting service whereby the "nannies" pay the "parents" to look after them.

So far the fee has not reached the original provider.

Yours faithfully,
PHILIP A. R. JAMES,
Snoadhill Cottage, Betersden, Kent.

From Mr Andrew H. Hooper

Sir, Our daughter simply cleans, feeds and plays with her Tamagotchi. She then rests the time and puts it back to sleep for another 12 hours.

Yours faithfully,
ANDREW H. HOOPER,
Grove House, 6 Castle Grove,
The Park, Nottingham.

From the Reverend Anthony Luckuck

Sir, I've not found myself holding the electronic baby; they are forbidden in our home.

But in the 11-year-olds' conversation on a recent school trip, I discovered an unexpected twist, which may be even more sinister than tending the Tamagotchi. It ran: "I've killed mine four times already, how often have you killed yours?"

Yours sincerely,
ANTHONY LUCKUCK,
St. John's Vicarage,
201 Oakdale Road,
Carlton, Nottingham.
amlecker@btinternet.com

From Mr Nicholas J. Huband

Sir, I was informed by a friend this weekend that there exists on the Internet a memorial Website for deceased Tamagotchis:

<http://www.netcom.com/~tamagotchi/tamnet.html>

I am forced to recognise a certain insane logic in a virtual memorial for a virtual pet.

Yours faithfully,
NICK HUBAND,
63 Thames Drive,
Leigh on Sea, Essex,
July 7.

Fruits of experience

From Mr Mark Ashford

Sir, I first encountered the phrase "going pear shaped" (letters, July 7 and 10) during flying training with the Royal Navy in the early 1980s and had therefore assumed it to be connected with military flying. Describing the result of an incorrectly executed manoeuvre such as a turn or a loop, perhaps?

Yours faithfully,
MARK ASHFORD,
79 Oliver Street,
Amphill, Bedfordshire,
July 10.

Fast food

From Mr Adrian Brodwin

Sir, One of your advertisers today ("Great Sporting Offers") has an intriguing offer. A mere £95 plus VAT secures "Private Suite Hospitality on starting grid" [their italics] including Complimentary Bar, Superb 4 course buffet lunch for this Sunday's British Grand Prix at Silverstone.

Although dining on pole position is undoubtedly an exciting prospect, lingering over lunch (with the race due to start at 2pm) might not be altogether advisable on this occasion.

Yours faithfully,
ADRIAN BRODWIN,
93 Kingsley Way, N2,
July 7.

OBITUARIES

ALEXANDER CORDELL

Alexander Cordell, novelist, was found dead in a stream near Llangollen, North Wales, on July 9 aged 82. He was born in Colombo, Ceylon, on September 9, 1914.

An incongruous figure to be espousing Welsh radical causes, with his military moustache and clipped British Army manner, Alexander Cordell nevertheless made a reputation both in and outside Wales for a series of novels depicting the sufferings endured by the dwellers of the South Wales Valleys during the Industrial Revolution. This began with the highly coloured Rape of the Fair Country, which appeared in 1959 and was an immediate popular success. The other titles of what became a trilogy, The Hosts of Rebecca (1960) and Song of the Earth (1969), built for Cordell a strong following, and this was sustained by a second trilogy which he published during the 1970s and 1980s.

These books were very far from winning him the approval of the Welsh literary establishment which suspected him of dishing up a shamelessly sentimentalised portrait of Welsh working-class life — complete with over-egged funny accents and perfunctory sex — for the purposes of commercial gain. Cordell in his turn robustly assailed the Welsh Arts Council and its grant-subsidised writers.

He particularly condemned poets as a useless breed, and when, in the 1970s, the late John Tripp tried to stand up for himself and fellow practitioners of the art of verse, Cordell went for him in the letters columns of the Western Mail, pointing out that no one had ever heard of Tripp while he, Cordell, enjoyed an international reputation.

Tripp (who has his own permanent niche in Penguin Modern Poets, besides having published several slim volumes of his own) defended himself in the same paper, pointing out that for modern poets commercial success, as a popular novelist understood it, was not the sole criterion of merit. On behalf of his fellow poets he declined to be "driven over by Mr Cordell's Jaguar and brisk, military mannerisms".

Cordell was, perhaps, on firmer ground when he attacked the Welsh Arts Council for awarding a £1,000 International Writer's Prize to the French playwright Eugene Ionesco, when there was little enough money to go round to support home-grown authors. But he can hardly have been surprised when the council did not look favourably on his proposal that it should fund an Alexander Cordell prize for novelists.

Nevertheless, though a British Empire born and bred Englishman, Cordell developed a sincere regard for his adoptive country. In his later years he espoused many causes relating to the preservation of the environment and the attempt to stem the decay of rural life and the erosion of the Welsh small community.

Alexander Cordell was born George Alexander Graber in Colombo, the son of a regimental sergeant-major in the Royal Engineers. As an army child he had a peripatetic upbringing and was partly educated by the Marist Brothers in Tanglin. Following in his father's footsteps he, too, joined the Royal Engineers as soon as he was old enough, and rose to the rank of major during the Second World War. Demobilised in 1945, he worked for the Civil Service as a quantity surveyor in the Monmouthshire valleys. But he had privately determined to become a successful writer, and it was the history of old iron towns, such as Tredegar and Ebbw Vale, that provided him with the impetus for his work.

A first novel, A Thought of Honour (1954), disappeared without trace, but with The Rape of the Fair Country he opened his account in earnest. In its graphic tale of capital versus labour in the iron foundries of the Monmouthshire valleys during the Industrial Revolution, it inevitably invited comparison with Richard Llewellyn's earlier How Green Was My Valley and its depiction of the impact of coalmining on the rural communities of South Wales.

In fact, Cordell did not really have Llewellyn's gift for catching the life and idiom of English as it is spoken by Welshmen (Llewellyn was, of course, Welsh born). And although he had done impressive research on the book's themes — the struggle for trade union rights, Chartism, the harshness of working conditions — a lush romanticism tended to be all-pervading. In the treatment of sex — young Welsh women were inevitably portrayed as wild and lusty — there was an uncomfortable approach to what has subsequently become known as the "bodice-ripper".

But, however much Welshmen might cavil at this portrait of themselves and their lack of control over their libidos, The Rape of the Fair Country enjoyed huge popularity. Its successors, The Hosts of Rebecca, which depicted the Rebecca Riots of West Wales in which insurgent gangs dressed up as women, and The Song of Earth, in which mineworkers escape from their environment by becoming hargreaves, established for Cordell a solid popularity among devotees of the "good read".

Cordell now branched out. Race of the Tiger (1963) applied his saga style to events in famine-stricken 19th-century Ireland, following the fortunes of a brother and sister who are forced to emigrate from Connemara to America. Cordell's experience of the Far East was also drafted into the service of fiction. The Sins of Love (1965) was set in Hong Kong; The Bright Cantonese (1967) was an espionage thriller about the threat of nuclear war between the United States and China; and The Dream and Destiny (1975) described Mao's Long March of the 1930s.

There was a feeling among reviewers that none of these quite did justice to Cordell's undoubted narrative gifts and it was to some relief among his faithful following that he turned back to Welsh industrial history for a second trilogy. This consisted of The Fire People (1972) about the 1831 Merthyr Tydfil rising; This Sweet and Bitter Earth (1977), which dealt with social and industrial unrest in Penrhyn and Tonypandy in the late Victorian and Edwardian eras; and Land of My Fathers (1983), a return to the Chartist period. Cordell published many other books and at the time of his death was working on a novel about the medieval Welsh prince Owain Glyndwr.

Cordell was an active member of the Welsh Nationalist Party, Plaid Cymru, and campaigned vigorously for self-government for Wales. He was also vociferous on the closing of rural schools, on proposals for new open-air theatres in the Vale of Neath and on a host of other environmental issues.

Since the death of his second wife Doreen in 1985, Cordell had led a largely reclusive life. He is survived by the daughter of his first marriage to Rosina Wells, who died in 1972.

HELENE PROPPER DE CALLEJON

Helene Propper de Callejon, writer and artist, died on June 28 aged 89. She was born on October 22, 1907.

A TOTAL cosmopolitan, Helene Propper de Callejon, or "Bubbles" as she was generally known, was a writer, an artist and a generous hostess throughout her husband's diplomatic career. In later years her home in Chelsea lacked nothing but a crystal ball to convince the most astute observer that he had walked into a luxurious three-storey gypsy caravan.

She was an attentive and demanding mother and an inspirational grandmother and friend to many people. These latter extended from Peter, the roadworker, to the Chelsea Pensioners round the corner, to the staff she fought with good-naturedly, through those who sought her help for depression (her devotees as she called them) to the great and the good. She looked with tenderness, ecumenical curiosity and an ebullient kindness on all those around her, an attitude which lost nothing for requiring in exchange some recognition of her own gifts.

She was the eldest daughter of Baron Eugene Fould and Mitzi Springer, an heiress in her own right. She grew up in the belle époque settings of her parents' beautiful homes, with their ceremonies and celebrations, their obligations and distances.

As a child and young woman she was not best served by circumstances which gave her great material comforts but little emotional stability. Her mother, Mitzi, was a capable, if domineering, woman of charm (who liked to sit up all night to watch Muhammad Ali beat Sonny Liston for the world heavyweight championship). She ran her husbands, children and businesses like a conglomerate, where time (her time), ambitions and convernience were highly prioritised. At Medding, their cavernous and theatrical summer home (now headquarters of an Austrian political party), in Hungary and in France, between the Palais Abbatial at Royanmont and 54 avenue d'Iena in Paris, Bubbles and her siblings were brought up, mostly by English nannies.

At the age of 18 she was given her first exhibition in Paris, with Jean Cocteau and Max Jacob, adopting "Praday" as a pseudonym. After the Second World War she published two collections of her poetry in Paris — Croquis and Album, and another volume Absents de Nous Mêmes, which contained her thoughts on depression, and advice on how to cope through it. She successfully completed a memoir entitled I Loved My Stay just two days before she died.

In 1929 Bubbles married the Spanish diplomat Eduardo Propper de Callejon. After ably supporting his distinguished career — from helping Jews to escape Nazism through to charge d'affaires in Washington, Ottawa and Oslo — they retired to live in London.

Bubbles was beautiful and admired as such, but to a gifted and sensitive girl this had never been enough on which to build both a character and a career. She writes in her memoirs of coming into her mother's room to say good morning, and being offered a hand to kiss. Her mother rarely turned her head to acknowledge her but, when she did, it was to rearrange the famous curls. It was not surprising, therefore, that Bubbles started life by tending more diligently to the outer than to the inner woman in order to gain her parents' approbation. Consequently, it was all the more impressive that in later life, after her husband's death, and through periods of deep sadness, she set about the task of learning how to live again, and to discover, and put to use, the best in herself.

"To live in hearts we love, is not to die" was a phrase she noted down in one of her books, adding that she was not sure if she had plagiarised the quote, but was quite sure that she believed in it. For all her creative gifts, developed and honed with constantly sought-for comments from her family, she will be remembered most of all for her human generosity, and a talent to identify with those with whom she came in contact. People laughed more with her; they shone when she succumbed to teasing.

She learnt to live vicariously in the best sense of the word. She would wait impatiently for regular reports on Felipe, her son, and his varied activities. Her daughter Elena became a psychotherapist, and Bubbles, with indomitable curiosity, added what she could learn from this to her own repertoire. One granddaughter, Helene Bonham Carter, became a film actress, and Bubbles, with panache, took on stardom, but her genius lay in allowing people to become themselves for her. This could be mistaken for vanity sometimes, a desire for flattery, a need for compliments and perhaps these things were all there; but the difficulties were born only from her overwhelming need to share, and participate in, the lives of those who mattered to her.

Sometimes her participation seemed invasive; sometimes she could seem more child than mother, but if her insecurities occasionally surfaced, her innocence and joie de vivre lent light and sweetness to all she touched.

She is survived by her son Felipe and her daughter Elena Bonham Carter.

MIGUEL NAJDORF

Miguel Najdorf, international chess grandmaster, died on July 6 aged 87. He was born on April 15, 1910.

MIGUEL NAJDORF was one of the great forces of chess, particularly during the late 1940s and early 1950s. He was possessed of an aggressive style, rich in imagination and always prepared for adventure. At his best he was a danger to the greatest. Sadly, his main ambition, that of winning the world championship itself, was denied to him. His own period of greatness coincided with the rise of the Soviet chess machine, which mass-produced grandmasters and top theoreticians through a state-supported system of chess tuition, competition and team effort.

A Jewish émigré from war-torn Europe, Najdorf, having fled Poland, had to make his own way in his newly chosen homeland of Argentina. Thrown entirely on his own resources, without a state apparatus to support him and, with the World Chess Federation heavily under the influence of the Soviet Union, and thus not particularly inclined to be charitable to a rival, Najdorf was never able to storm the absolute chess summit and assail successfully his Soviet opponents.

Nevertheless, he won the Argentine chess championship eight times and, by his presence and inspiration, he succeeded in making his adopted country one of the most forceful chess nations in the world. Najdorf won no fewer than 52 international tournaments and, whether in competition, friendly or simultaneous games, he managed to face all of the 13 world chess champions except for the very first one, Wilhelm Steinitz. Of the champions, he inflicted defeat on five — Botvinnik, Smyslov, Petrosian, Tal and Fischer.

In international team events he played in numerous chess Olympiads, at first for Poland and then 11 times for Argentina. As an ambassador for chess, for which role his outgoing and ebullient personality ideally suited him, he contested games against such personalities as Winston Churchill, Nikita Khrushchev, the Shah of Iran, Juan Peron, Fidel Castro and Che Guevara. Always the gentleman over the chess board, Najdorf regularly offered draws to such personalities after a few moves. These draws were usually eagerly accepted with the exception of Che Guevara, who was almost master strength himself in chess. Having declined the draw, Guevara went on to lose.

Najdorf's name, in spite of his numerous successes, may go down in chess history for the variation of the Sicilian Defence which he helped to popularise and which is now the favourite of the reigning world champion Garry Kasparov, as well as having been the preferred weapon of Bobby Fischer.

By the age of 25, Najdorf was already recognised as a serious player in the European chess environment. During the Buenos Aires Olympiad of 1939, while representing Poland, he sought asylum in Argentina and became an Argentine citizen in 1944. At that time he changed his first name from Moishe to Miguel. In Argentina he also made a fortune in the insurance business, which relieved him of the chessmaster's usual penury.

After the war Najdorf emerged as a leading tournament competitor, a position he maintained for a quarter of a century, winning first prizes at the tournaments of Prague and Barcelona in 1946, Venice in 1948, Bled and Amsterdam in 1950 and Havana in 1962. He was particularly deadly in the series of tournaments in Mar del Plata where he won outright in 1961, 1965 and 1968. In 1950 he won the prize for the best individual score on top board in the chess Olympiad.

While competing in serious tournaments Najdorf also felt it his duty to entertain the public. On one occasion in 1943 he played no fewer than 202 games at one and the same time while, later in the 1940s, he played an amazing 45 games at one and the same time without sight of any of the boards, registering a staggering performance of 39 wins, four draws and just two losses. In addition to this he was a brilliant "blitz" chess player, ready to take on all-comers at games of ten minutes' duration in total. To the end of his life he would offer large stakes to masters a fraction of his age.

Najdorf died in Malaga, Spain, after a lengthy illness. A chess lover to the end, he attended a chess exhibition given by Kasparov a week before his death.

He was twice married and is survived by one daughter of his second marriage.

PERSONAL COLUMN

TRUSTEE ACTS

NOTICE is hereby given that the following persons have been appointed trustees of the following trusts:
 1. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 2. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 3. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 4. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.

LEGAL NOTICES

NOTICE is hereby given that the following persons have been appointed trustees of the following trusts:
 1. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 2. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 3. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 4. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.

PUBLIC NOTICES

NOTICE is hereby given that the following persons have been appointed trustees of the following trusts:
 1. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 2. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 3. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 4. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE is hereby given that the following persons have been appointed trustees of the following trusts:
 1. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 2. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 3. The Trust of the late Mr. J. H. Smith, deceased, under his will, dated 10th day of March 1997.
 4. The Trust of the late Mrs. J. H. Smith, deceased, under her will, dated 10th day of March 1997.

FLATSHARE

FLATSHARE is a service which allows you to share a flat with other people. It is a great way to save money and meet new people. For more information, visit our website at www.flatshare.co.uk.

HEALTH & BEAUTY

HEALTH & BEAUTY is a service which allows you to book appointments with health and beauty professionals. It is a great way to save money and meet new people. For more information, visit our website at www.healthandbeauty.co.uk.

DOMESTIC & CATERING

DOMESTIC & CATERING is a service which allows you to book appointments with domestic and catering professionals. It is a great way to save money and meet new people. For more information, visit our website at www.domesticandcatering.co.uk.

LEGAL, PUBLIC, COMPANY & PARLIAMENTARY NOTICES

LEGAL, PUBLIC, COMPANY & PARLIAMENTARY NOTICES is a service which allows you to place notices in the newspaper. It is a great way to reach a large audience. For more information, visit our website at www.legalpubliccompanyandparliamentary.co.uk.

TO PLACE NOTICES FOR THIS SECTION

TO PLACE NOTICES FOR THIS SECTION, please telephone 0171-680 6876 or FAX 0171-481 9313.

WATERLOO SUBSCRIPTION.

Yesterday a meeting of the inhabitants of Westminster was held in the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's, to take into consideration the propriety of appointing a committee to receive subscriptions for the relief and benefit of sufferers by the battle of Waterloo. Mr. Wilberforce said it would not be necessary for him to make any appeal to their feelings to fulfil the purpose for which they had met. They all knew how much was done, and how much was suffered. In other victories, however, there might be some doubt with respect to the advantages of the result. In the present instance there could be no such doubt. Every one present, every man, every rank, every class in the country, felt their security increased by the issue of the battle of Waterloo. When a question was asked with regard to the intention of including the Hanoverians and Belgians as sharers in

ON THIS DAY

July 12, 1815

The Battle of Waterloo had been won but a number of problems were left in its wake the charity that should be raised, it seemed to be expressed generally by the meeting, that, as fighting under Lord Wellington and contributing to the success of the various battles, they should not be neglected, though our own countrymen had the first claim upon our sympathy and charity. Mr. Rowcroft said that in the draught [sic] of the City Resolution the "British Army" had been mentioned, which left the destinations of their subscriptions open to liberal construction. The Duke of Wellington was agreed to be the most proper person to decide who should be included. Mr. Rowcroft, from the City, stated that a letter had been received from Prince Blücher, mentioning that he had fought two battles, taken two forts, and masked two more in eight days; but that his army had suffered much, that he recommended his wounded Prussians to the liberality of the British, and begged that Mr. Wilberforce's charitable efforts might be solicited. A liberal subscription was immediately entered into.

On the 25th Buonaparte applied to the Provisional Government of France for two frigates which were immediately granted. Passports for his voyage to the United States were asked of the Duke of Wellington, who replied from his headquarters: "As to what regards a passport and protection for Napoleon to go to the United States: I must inform your Excellency that I have no authority from my Government to give any answer whatsoever to that demand". (signed) WELLINGTON.

OLD SCHOOL TIE

OLD SCHOOL TIE is a service which allows you to book appointments with old school tie professionals. It is a great way to save money and meet new people. For more information, visit our website at www.oldschooltie.co.uk.

Woolwich windfall outcome

THE 600,000 Woolwich savers and borrowers who opted to sell their shares immediately will gain an average windfall of £1,900. Shares in the last of four auctions used to sell off the unwanted stock made an average price of 292p yesterday. The average from all the auctions was 296p. Woolwich shares fell 4½p to 299½p yesterday.

Bus takeover

LONDON United Buses, the capital's last independent red bus company, is to be sold for £41.4 million to Transdev, the French state-owned transport group. United runs 580 buses on 40 routes in southwest London.

Energy sale

THE Energy Group yesterday sold part of its recently acquired power trading business in the US. The sale to Lehman Brothers will deliver $20-$25 million (£11.5-£14.8 million) to The Energy Group. The sale is subject to the takeover of The Energy Group by PacifiCorp.

Eurofighter decision secures jobs

By CHRISTINE BUCKLEY, INDUSTRIAL CORRESPONDENT

THOUSANDS of jobs in the defence industry were yesterday secured with Germany's backing of the four-nation Eurofighter programme.

The fighter aircraft project, in which the UK has a 38 per cent stake through British Aerospace, will guarantee about 16,000 direct jobs at peak production and support an estimated 80,000 related jobs. Production may start in early 1999 and could run for about 30 years if export interest in the aircraft is strong enough.

Bae said: "We are delighted that we have got through this stage. We have always been convinced about the Eurofighter project."

Bae will handle final assembly of the aircraft at its plant in Warton, Lancashire, which will also deal with component manufacture along with the company's centres in Sandhurst, Lancashire, and Brough, East Yorkshire. Jobs will also be secured at Rolls-Royce's military engine production centre in Bristol. Rolls has a 33 per cent stake in a consortium to build engines for the Eurofighter.

Germany's final endorsement of the £40 billion development of the Eurofighter, which involves Italy (with a 20 per cent stake) and Spain (12 per cent), means that the Royal Air Force will get new aircraft by 2001. Britain has ordered 230 Eurofighters.

Germany's budget problems have cast a shadow over the Eurofighter programme which was launched in 1983. Britain has placed increasing pressure on Bonn to ensure collaboration from the project's second-biggest partner.

Germany, through Dasa, has a 30 per cent stake. Its commitment yesterday guarantees the next stage of development, which will lead to the signing of investment contracts when the partners start to tool up to make the aircraft.

Farmer shareholders at the Avonmore food company meeting that backed a merger with Waterford that may hit British jobs

Irish dairy merger wins vote

From Eileen McCabe in Dublin

IRISH farmer shareholders in the co-operative societies that hold the controlling interest in the Avonmore and Waterford food companies yesterday voted overwhelmingly for their merger to create the biggest dairy company in Ireland.

The new company, Avonmore Waterford, will have annual turnover of £2.5 billion (£2.2 billion). Its billion-gallon milk pool will make it the world's fourth-largest dairy company.

The merger will result in some job losses in Ireland, but it is expected that the main impact will be in Britain, where there is considerable overlap in the companies' operations.

Although yesterday's vote must be ratified at a further meeting later this month, it is highly unlikely that the decision will be overturned.

Members of the Avonmore co-op were the most enthusiastic for the plan, with almost 96 per cent of those at yesterday's meeting voting for it. In neighbouring Waterford, it drew 83 per cent of votes. It needed the support of 75 per cent of those at the meetings.

Christie's sales reach six-year high

By JON ASHWORTH

CHRISTIE'S INTERNATIONAL, the fine art auctioneer, clinched sales of £557 million in the first half of the year — the highest level for nearly six years.

It sold 75 works of art for $1 million or more. Sales were up 15 per cent in sterling terms and 23 per cent in dollars, pointing to the continuing recovery of the international art market. The main Christie's salesrooms are in London, New York, Geneva and Hong Kong, and the strength of the pound is less of a concern.

The figures were swelled by the success of the John and Frances L. Loeb collection, which totalled £57.3 million, the highest for a single-owner sale of Impressionist art at Christie's. Lord Hindlip, the chairman of Christie's, said underlying sales rose 7 per cent, even without the Loeb sale. He said: "The strong sales growth of the first six months of 1997 reflects both the exceptional success of the Loeb collection of Impressionist pictures and the continuing widely based strength of the international art market."

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

ICI's £475m profit on Australia stake

ICI will make a profit of £475 million on the sale of its 62.4 per cent stake in ICI Australia. The price of the offering of 143 million shares is A$12.35 (£5.46) a share, a discount of 2.76 per cent to the closing price of A$12.70. The global bookbuilding was "significantly oversubscribed".

Underwriters' options on 12 million shares to cover over-allocation, together with the 30 million-share sale to ICI Australia, should result in the divestment of the whole of ICI's stake. ICI will use funds from the disposal to help to finance its £4.9 billion purchase of Unilever's speciality chemicals businesses. The City response yesterday was lukewarm, with ICI's shares closing up 2p at 810½p.

Burton director resigns

THE Burton Group has confirmed that Stuart Rose, chief executive of Dorothy Perkins, Principles, Evans and Burton Menswear, has resigned as a director. Mr Rose, who was on a two-year contract and a 1997 salary of £280,000, is in line for a payoff of at least £560,000. The company would not say if he will work out a notice period. It said negotiations about his settlement were in progress. In 1996 he was paid £514,000; his basic salary was £248,000. Mr Rose's job disappears with the reorganisation announced this week.

Lawrence 20% ahead

LAWRENCE, the animal healthcare and pet accessories group which floated on the Alternative Investment Market two years ago, enjoyed a 20.1 per cent rise in pre-tax profits in the year to March 31, from £1.8 million to £2.2 million. Turnover was up 10.8 per cent from £15.5 million to £15 million, and earnings per share jumped 16.7 per cent from 20.36p to 23.7p. A final dividend of 6.12p (5.56p) will be paid on November 6, bringing the total dividend to 7.77p (7.06p). The group says it will continue to look for acquisitions.

Sovereign liquidation

WILLIS CORROON, the insurance broker, has been forced to put its Sovereign subsidiary into liquidation after losing an arbitration battle with a reinsurer. Sovereign has effectively been closed to new business since 1992, but Willis Corroon has been forced to put up around £80 million to meet liabilities. However, losing the dispute with the reinsurer would mean that Willis Corroon could be faced with unlimited liability through Sovereign. Willis Corroon refused to give details of the arbitration.

Eagles' Sharks stake

EAGLES, owner of the Sheffield Eagles rugby league team, is paying Mushroom Records, the Australian music group, £40,000 for a 40 per cent stake in the Sheffield Sharks, the Premier league basketball team. Mushroom is retaining a 10 per cent stake in the team, while Chrysalis Group will retain its 50 per cent holding. Chrysalis and the Eagles are also pumping a total of £200,000 into the Sheffield Sharks in the form of convertible loan notes.

Prism Leisure advances

PRISM LEISURE, the cut-price computer games, music and video wholesaler, lifted profits to £2.7 million, up 28 per cent from £2.1 million, in the year to March 28. Turnover was £29.1 million, up 20 per cent from £22.3 million, and earnings per share were 20.93p, up 22 per cent from 17.12p. A final dividend of 5.46p (4.37p) will be paid on September 2, bringing the total dividend to 7.19p (5.75p). The company has sold two divisions, Paul Lamond Games and Kidz Biz, back to their management for £100,000 plus some assets.

TOURIST RATES

	Bank	Bank
	Buy	Sell
Australia $	2.38	2.20
Austria Sch	22.04	20.38
Belgium Fr	64.95	59.50
Canada $	2.446	2.258
Cyprus Cyp	0.850	0.840
Denmark Kr	11.58	11.09
Finland Mk	6.41	6.06
France Fr	10.57	9.79
Germany Dm	3.15	2.91
Greece Dr	488	457
Hong Kong $	13.90	12.70
Iceland	127	107
Ireland Pt	1.17	1.08
Israel Shk	6.22	5.67
Italy Lit	3668	2846
Japan Yen	207.83	194.30
Malta	0.688	0.629
Netherlands Gld	8.509	8.264
Norway Kr	2.69	2.45
Portugal Esc	13.13	12.19
S Africa Rd	314.03	292.10
Spain Ps	8.43	7.47
Sweden Kr	261.79	245.00
Switzerland Fr	13.96	12.86
Taiwan Nts	2.82	2.40
UK £	262.22	249.47
USA $	1.758	1.688

Rates for small denomination bank notes only as supplied by Barclays Bank PLC. Different rates apply to traveller's cheques. Rates as at close of trading yesterday.

THE SUNDAY TIMES

HAMBROS' HIGH NOON

It should have been Hambros' biggest deal for a decade — instead Andrew Regan's bid for the Co-op turned into the bank's biggest nightmare.

Business Focus — tomorrow

THE SUNDAY TIMES IN THE SUNDAY PAPERS

10p

THE TIMES

FIND OUT IF HE'S A NATURAL.

Don't miss the highlights and lowlights of the British Grand Prix. Only in Monday's 10p Times.

<http://www.the-times.co.uk>

CHANGING TIMES

مكتبة الامم المتحدة

Road to success began with dawn of Creation 100

"Youngsters today, they've got no brand loyalty"

3 FREE

issues of Moneywise

The only personal finance magazine you'll ever need!

PLUS FREE
Tax-Free Saving
Guide* and Pension Planner* when you apply within 7 days.

Now you can enjoy the UK's best-selling personal finance magazine FREE for 3 months. Take advantage of expert advice on how to spend, save, invest and plan for the future. Subscribe today by completing and returning the Direct Debit form below. We won't charge your account until you've received your 3 free issues. By then we believe you'll find it indispensable.

Save £8.40 on our annual cover price

What's more, MONEYWISE will start saving you money straight away – not only are your first 3 issues absolutely FREE but your subscription will be just £6 a quarter, a saving of £8.40 on the published annual price of £32.40. Why hesitate? Subscribe at once for a richer future.

YOU'LL GET INDEPENDENT AND JARGON-FREE ADVICE EVERY MONTH

- Expert advice from experts in banking, investment and pensions • Best buys – that will truly enrich your spending
- Increased earning power – reliable tips from blue chip companies to alternative investments
- Frank information on your rights as a taxpayer, investor, mortgagee and consumer • How to increase returns on all your investments
- Monthly features and in-depth investigations • Information on share movements and house prices

Customer Information: Please keep for reference: You are offered three free monthly issues of Moneywise magazine, following your first three issues, if you do not write to us and your bank, etc., tell you will reimburse any postage costs, your subscription to Moneywise will begin at £2.4 a copy of UK 10 off our published price of £12.40 – and the cost will be debited from your bank account at quarterly intervals. A subscription contract may under circumstances. You will be notified of any price changes prior to renewal. You may cancel at any time and receive a refund but copies not supplied. Offer applies in the UK only. Orders are subject to acceptance by R.D. Publications Ltd. Personal data will be used only by R.D. Publications Ltd. and its associated companies, details of which can be obtained free from R.D. Publications Ltd. R.D. Publications Ltd. observes the Code of Practice of the Direct Marketing Association, details of which can be obtained from the address: R.D. Publications Ltd., c/o Carven Street, London W1V 7PE. Registered number 2541047 England. SN McRae, Managing Director, JP Reynolds, RG Twiss.

OFFER CLOSING 28TH JULY

YES! Please send me the next 3 months issues of Moneywise - FREE!

I understand that if I do not wish to continue after my three months, free trial, I can cancel this order at any time before payment is due on 11th October 1997 – and not owe you anything. But if I decide to continue, I need do nothing – my subscription will bring me MONEYWISE each month at the current price of £6 a quarter, paid by Direct Debit.

Instruction to your bank/building society: Please pay Moneywise Direct Debits from the account detailed on this instruction subject the safeguards assured by the Direct Debit Guarantee.

Bank/Building Society Account in the name of BLOCK LETTERS PLEASE:

--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--

Bank/Building Society Account No

--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--

Bank/Building Society Sort Code

--	--	--	--	--	--

Originator's Reference No. 625957 Bank/Building societies may not accept instructions to pay Direct Debits from some types of account.

Please fill in your name and address

Initials _____ Surname _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Please return this coupon FREE to: Moneywise, FREEPOST 34, R.D. Publications,
7-10 Old Bailey, London EC4M 7NB

CHANGE OF HEART 38

Three-month battle over renting out

WEEKEND MONEY

HARD LINE 39

Lender calls in debt after five years

THE TIMES: PERSONAL FINANCE NEWSPAPER OF THE YEAR

Tickets still left for society ball

Marianne Curphey explains why aspiring carpetbaggers could still be windfall winners

For those people who will come to the end of this summer not a penny richer as a result of the conversion of four building societies and Norwich Union, all is not lost.

There is still time to join the carpetbaggers club, although you need to be selective. Some societies, such as the Nationwide — top tip to be taken over — have closed their doors to new members because of the huge number of speculators.

The City has put a price tag of £7 billion on Nationwide, which would give members a windfall of about £1,500 each at takeover. Nationwide has come under pressure from carpetbaggers who are trying to win places on the board.

NPI is more difficult to price, but is the subject of constant rumour. Both the Halifax bank and AMP of Australia are thought to be interested in bidding. Though NPI is not one of the best-performing pension providers, speculators can gain membership by investing £20 gross a month into NPI's pension, or £2,000 in its Balanced Bond. The latter allows investment of up to 60 per cent in the with-profit fund.

Chartwell Investment Management, an independent financial adviser in Bath, has calculated that each member of a life company that is taken over could be entitled to between £700 and £900.

Of the large remaining building societies, Bradford & Bingley, with a potential price tag of £15 billion, is likely to give each qualifying member around £1,500. Analysts believe that if the Nationwide is forced to convert as a result of the vote by members on July 24 at its annual meeting, then Bradford & Bingley and Britannia will come under pressure and may merge.

That combined society would then be big enough to float on the stock market. Currently, you need £500 to open a Bradford & Bingley instant-access account and £2,000 to open a Britannia 90-day notice account. Carpetbaggers should ensure they open a share account.

A domino effect could then follow. The Yorkshire, which is staunchly pro-mutual, could be forced to merge or convert, yielding £1,500 for each member. Its branch-based share account requires a minimum £2,000. Birmingham Midshires would yield around £1,200. Carpetbaggers need £2,500 to invest. The Fortman, which requires a minimum opening balance of £1,000, could yield a windfall of £1,000.

The National Counties, which has only one branch in the country, would yield an estimated £5,000. However, it will only open new share accounts to existing members or their families, who need a minimum £3,000.

Some societies have been making efforts to deter carpetbaggers. Last month the Coventry raised minimum opening balances to £2,500. Lambeth closed all but one account and raised the threshold to £5,000. While societies rapidly close their doors to speculators, it is still possible to buy a policy from a mutual life insurer with a small sum. Unlike building society accounts, however, these contracts need to be kept up for at least five to ten years.

The hotly rumoured takeover target in this sector is Friends Provident, where with-profit savings plans require a minimum £35 a month and pensions £20 a month gross or a single premium of £1,000 gross. Chartwell (01225 446 556) will open accounts for an administration fee of £30 in other life insurers that are potential converters, including Britannia Life, Equitable Life, National Mutual, Royal Liver, Wesleyan, Standard Life, Scottish Widows, Scottish Life and Scottish Widows.

Patrick Connolly of Chartwell said he had been inundated with calls from life company carpetbaggers. He said: "In time, mutual insurers are likely to raise their minimum monthly premiums to deter speculators."

He believes that it may be several years before Standard

Life demutualises, while other insurers like Scottish Provident and Scottish Life may change status much sooner.

Scottish Life has a with-profit savings policy starting at £25 a month, while for pension contracts there is no minimum premium on their regular contributions and a minimum premium of £1,000 on single contributions.

However, analysts believe that NPI, National Mutual and some of the Scottish mutual insurers are unlikely to convert or allow themselves to be taken over while the UK stock market is still rising. They argue that while the FTSE 100 is strong, these mutuals will have no problem paying out bonuses. It is only during a period of low or negative returns that they will feel under pressure to find a parent.

Time has almost run out for Halifax members wishing to put windfall shares into a Pep on the best possible terms (Gavin Lumsden writes). Inland Revenue rules allow free shares to be transferred into a Pep on top of the annual allowance of £9,000, provided this occurs within 42 days of the shares being issued. For Halifax members, this deadline expires tomorrow.

Halifax's administration centre at 5 Rayleigh Road, Sharncliffe, Brentwood, Essex, is accepting completed application forms until 11pm on Sunday. Its Pep helpline is 0345 770 066. Fidelity is keeping its Tonbridge, Kent, office open until midnight on Sunday (helpline 0800 414161). Mercury will accept applications by hand until noon today at its head office at 33 King William Street, London.

WEEKEND MONEY is edited by Anne Ashworth

The traditional safe-havens for older savers — pensioners' bonds and gilts — are looking distinctly less attractive this week after the third rise in base rates in three months, prompting speculation that National Savings may have to increase its rates.

With a new base rate of 6.75 per cent, the 7 per cent offered on National Savings pensioners' bonds has little appeal, particularly since the over-60s must lock away their money for five years to get the full rate.

National Savings said: "Our rates are determined by Havens for older savers lose appeal the yield on gilts, not base rate changes. Each product has its own gilt comparator so if there's a change it would prompt us to change our rates. There is not much movement in five-year money rates, which is why we have not changed the rate on the pensioners' bond."

At the same time, National Savings has a mandate to raise money for the Government — £3 billion this year — and it can do this only if products attract enough custom.

A number of banks and building societies have recently improved rates on their savings accounts.

Portman Building Society

now has an instant-access account that is paying 5.25 per cent gross on deposits of £100 or more. However, the minimum amount required to open an account is £1,000. Rates on the Portman's monthly interest account are now 6 per cent.

Savers' rates have also risen on the Chelsea Building Society's postal classic account, with rates starting at 3.25 per cent for balances of £2,500 to £4,999, rising in stages to 5.50 per cent on balances in excess of £50,000.

KAREN ZAGOR

Cash makes a comeback

This week's quarter point on interest rates does not seem much. But three in short order are beginning to add up and the markets will be surprised if the 6.75 per cent base rate does not become 7 per cent before too long. After losing its appeal for five years, cash suddenly looks more attractive.

For savers, this has come at just the right time. Millions face a lengthy rethink after Gordon Brown's havoc-wreaking Budget. New investment in personal equity plans has lost much of its appeal for standard-rate taxpayers, even if dividend tax relief does not end until 1999. Remember, though, that higher-rate taxpayers still benefit and that corporate bond Peps do not lose relief on interest income.

By 1999 individual savings accounts, or Isas, are promised. But that does not make it any easier to plan long-term savings now. The new vehicle's shape has not yet been revealed to potential customers or to those permitted to market them, whoever they may be. The details have not even been decided.

The many millions whose pensions rely on investment returns rather than employers' promises know that those pensions are likely to be less than projected a month ago. How much less will vary with age and is hard to quantify. Dividend-based actuarial sums applied to final-salary schemes are only a rough guide. The measures that threaten to cut real returns by half a point a year (perhaps 12 per cent) may eventually cut income on pension annuities too.

Middle-aged savers who have windfalls might sleep sounder if they bung

PERSONAL INVESTOR

GRAHAM SEARJEANT

them into their pension fund as a top-up. Young people are, in theory, hardest hit but should not rush to save more in a money-purchase fund. Pension plans are restrictive long-term commitments. Many under-30s will reckon it is not worth losing flexibility unless they can be sure that the pension regime will be stable for decades ahead.

The Chancellor says his £5 billion a year raid on dividend reliefs will not hurt people's pensions. This is infinitely more outrageous than Harold Wilson's 1967 claim that "the pound in your pocket or purse" would not be devalued like the pound against the dollar. The new Treasury team does not seem too worried about upsetting savers' plans. Limits on tax relief for contributions are on the cards; pension companies regularly offer up tax-free lump sums as a Budget sacrifice and capital gains tax is to be restructured next year.

Cash is rarely a good home for savings for long, and savers who try to switch between cash and securities usually get their timing wrong. Just at the moment, however, there is much to be said for letting new savings accumulate in cash while the Budget sinks in.

The attraction does not lie solely in the rate. Opinions on short-term interest trends are now settling down. Prices on the Life futures market have for months predicted a vague rising curve, perhaps reaching 7.5 per cent eventually, perhaps 8 per cent. Futures prices now present a clearer, more convincing picture. They project a modest rise to a peak of about 7.35 per cent in the next nine months, and rates staying at about 7.25 per cent for two years.

After the Budget, it is a fair bet that base rates will stay at or above today's rate for a year or more. When base rates reached 6.75 per cent in 1995, they stayed for a year. Long-term interest rates were then quite a bit higher than cash. Today there is little difference. If base rates stay relatively high, the chances of a setback to UK share prices also grow markedly. Lower corporation tax may permit higher dividends but net yields average only 2.8 per cent and the high pound will hit export earnings or the sterling value of foreign profits for many top groups.

Bonds look a sound medium-term bet if inflation stays under control but may make little progress against rising cash interest rates. For the saver prepared to hunt for the best rates, deposits of up to a year in unconverted building societies combine common sense with the added attractions of a lottery.

paying money into your pension

Take a break if you need to, start again when you can. Put away a lot, a little, different amounts at different times. It's your money and your pension. We don't tie you up with stupid rules or charge you for changing your plans. To start today, give us a call.

Virgin direct personal financial service

0645 95 95 95

Open seven days a week from 8am to 10pm

Virgin Direct Personal Financial Service Ltd is regulated by the Personal Investment Authority. The price of units and any income from them can go down as well as up and you may not get back all the money you invest. The basis of tax may change and the value of the tax benefit depends on how much tax you pay. For your security, all calls to Virgin Direct will be recorded and randomly monitored.

NEWTON

International performance.
Newton brings it home to you.

Fund	Quartile Ranking over the following time periods
	6 months	1 year	3 years	5 years
Newton Japan Fund	1st	1st	1st	1st
Newton European	2nd	2nd	1st	2nd
Newton International Bond	2nd	1st	1st	1st
Newton General	1st	1st	1st	2nd
Newton International Growth	1st	1st	1st	2nd

“Newton's range of international unit trusts offers an excellent record of consistent performance. Proof that wherever in the world you choose to invest, you'll feel at home with Newton.”

Simon Wombwell, Sales and Marketing Director

For more information about the Newton International unit trusts, return the coupon, talk to your financial adviser or call us free on 0800 614 330 (8am - 10pm INCLUDING WEEKENDS, e-mail: helpdesk@newton.co.uk)

Source: Mirocap. Figures to 16 June 1997, after 10 bid, net income reinvested. The value of units and the income from them can go down as well as up and investors may not get back the full amount invested. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to the future. It should be noted that capital invested in a savings account remains intact whereas the price of units can fall as well as rise. Newton Fund Managers Limited is regulated by the Personal Investment Authority and IMRO, a member of AIFU, 71 Queen Victoria Street, London EC4V 4DR.

To: Newton Fund Managers Ltd, FREEPOST, 2 Festival Square, Edinburgh EH2 0EE

Title _____ Surname _____ First name _____
Address _____ Postcode _____
Daytime Tel _____ Date of Birth _____ TM 12/7/97

“Newton has a single aim in life: to increase the real wealth of all of our clients.”

Helen Pridham on what to look for in an annual travel policy

Hopefully travelling more than once a year

Travel policies covering 12 months are becoming more popular as many people start to take more than one holiday a year. Their cost is sometimes little more than you would pay for single-trip insurance, especially if you buy through a travel agent.

The cost difference has been accentuated since April 1 when travel insurance bought as part of a package holiday started incurring insurance premium tax (IPT) at 17.5 per cent, while travel insurance bought separately is only subject to IPT at 4 per cent.

Annual policies can be purchased at banks, post offices, building societies, travel and medical insurers, such as Bupa, Assitalia Protect, a new annual policy available from insurance brokers, has just been launched by the British Insurance and Investment Brokers' Association (BIIBA).

Comparisons between policies tend to focus on premium cost. Benefits such as medical expenses or baggage cover may be highlighted and attention drawn to whether “hazardous activities” are covered. However, other aspects of cover on annual policies need to be considered.

■ Trip lengths: annual policies usually cover an unlimited number of holidays but maximum trip length can vary. Usually it is 31 days but some policies allow longer. The new BIIBA policy has a 45-day maximum but WorldCover Direct covers up to 93 days.

■ Ski cover: if you are taking out an annual policy to cover both summer and winter holidays, check whether ski cover is included. Not all insurers

PAUL HACKETT

If your flight is cancelled, are you covered? — see below include it on a standard policy. Among those which do are Yorkshire Bank and Halifax which both allow a skiing holiday of up to 21 days on basic annual policies. Woolwich and Barclays do not include this cover as standard.

■ Family policies: most annual policies have a family cover option for two adults and two or three children. Children under two or three often have free cover. Under the Post Office, General Accident and the BIIBA policies, only children up to the age of 16 are counted. For any child of 16 or over, the full adult rate is charged — that could add £60 to £70 per child to the cost of the annual policy. Some policies such as those from Halifax and Yorkshire Bank include children up to 18. Woolwich and WorldCover Direct cover children up to 23 in full-time study living at home.

■ Separate travel: do not assume a family annual travel policy covers members travelling separately as well as together. Under the Post Office policy, for example, only the policyholder is covered when away from the family. Many policies, though, allow adults to travel separately but not children. They must always be with at least one adult. Some policies cover children travelling separately — useful if your children go on holiday with other families or on exchange visits. BIIBA's policy provides this cover for children up to 16. WorldCover Direct does so for children up to 23. Bupa has two travel policies — the gold version allows for separate travel including children up to 18, but its basic policy requires the policyholder to accompany any other member of the family including the spouse.

■ Business travel: annual policies are mainly for leisure trips but some include business travel, including those from Yorkshire Bank and Barclays. Bupa, WorldCover Direct, and BIIBA policies can be extended to include it.

■ UK holidays: cover for UK holidays is included in most annual policies. If a family member goes to hospital while away, the policy will cover the cost of transfer back to a local hospital, or if you have to cut short your holiday because of illness the balance of accommodation costs are covered.

Thousands of holidaymakers have been suffering the misery of cancelled or delayed flights this week during the British Airways strike. For many, frustration will be compounded by fears that entire summer holiday budgets may be wasted.

Strike victims can take scant comfort from BA's “goodwill” package, which is currently limited to free meals and other expenses incurred during the period of delay. Those prudent enough to take out travel insurance can expect to recoup at least some of their losses. Most policies will pay compensation to customers who have their holidays shortened or cancelled by strikes, and

Your rights and cancelled flights

Insurers are bracing themselves for a flood of claims. However, even for the insured, there are pitfalls to avoid.

If insurance is taken out for a holiday which is already known to be facing disruption, travellers are likely to be barred from making strike-related claims. Leading companies such as Eagle Star and Commercial Union are among those who revoke cover after strike action is announced, so if you are thinking of taking a risk on your flight escaping a strike, it may be wise to think again.

Most insurers pay out flight delay compensation of between £10 and £20 for every 12-hour wait. Some allow customers to abandon their holidays with a full refund after the first 12 hours of a delay, but there are exceptions and it pays to check the small print. Home & Overseas Insurance, which provides many of the policies offered by travel agents and tour operators, admits that a minority of its policies do not refund on abandonment.

NATHAN YATES

“Threadneedle. A sharper focus on investment”

Take a close look at what Threadneedle has to offer and you'll see why our approach is generating an increasing amount of interest from today's investors.

● Consistency Our investment approach places the emphasis first and foremost on consistent, reliable long-term performance. With a clear investment process behind this objective, Threadneedle is building a distinctive reputation.

● Expertise There's a wealth of experience in our investment team — one of the largest in the City. This expertise has been applied to the successful management of funds for Allied Dunbar and Eagle Star over the last three years.

● Innovation Our new range of investment funds, planned for August, will be state-of-the-art: modern, flexible, with crystal clear investment aims.

● Security We already have over £32 billion under management and are the 8th largest unit trust investment manager in the country. And with the backing and support of B.A.T. Industries, the UK's 11th largest company, we offer financial stability that's beyond question.

With this unique combination of benefits, you should keep your eye on Threadneedle in the coming months.

Threadneedle investments

Run by Threadneedle Investment Managers Limited, 40 St Mary Lane, London EC3A 8JQ. Registered by FOS.

T0004

FIRST CLASS RETURNS IN AN INSTANT

You don't have to go any further than the nearest post box to earn the sort of interest you see above and have instant access to your money.

First Class Instant, the new instant access postal account from Alliance & Leicester offers you a competitive 7.00% gross p.a. on balances starting at £10,000. You can also enjoy three penalty free withdrawals a year.

All transactions are conducted by a First Class freepost service. So, if you're looking for first class returns — call the number below for an information pack today!

CALL FREE
0800 412 214

quoting reference 256

ALLIANCE LEICESTER
FIRST CLASS INSTANT

Information provided over the telephone may be used to advise you of details of any products and services which we think may be of interest to you. If you prefer not to receive these details, please let us know. Up to three withdrawals (maximum £200 per month) are permitted per annum. No further withdrawals allowed. Source: Bank's Gazette. Comparison correct as at 5 July 1997, and is based on rates available on that date only. Comparison is on the basis of net terms and conditions vary from account to account, and are for the best paying postal accounts from the providers listed above. Interest rates quoted are variable and gross. Interest will be payable out of account tax at the rate determined by the Inland Revenue (currently 20%) or subject to the required registration gross. Additional tax will be payable if you are a higher rate taxpayer. Interest is payable monthly or quarterly in arrears. For requests, interest rates apply to monthly interest. The arrangement made by cheque, interest is calculated from the fourth banking day following receipt, up to and including the day before withdrawal. Minimum age 18. Only available to UK residents. Withdrawal opening withdrawal £1,000. Full terms and conditions available on request. Alliance & Leicester plc, Registered Office: 40 St Mary Lane, London, EC3A 8JQ. Company No. 3233745. Registered in England. Authorized as a bank pursuant to the Banking Act 1987. Member of the British Bankers' Association.

هنا من الأصل

Beware insurers bearing gifts

Caroline Conran's celebrated £10.5 million divorce settlement did not apparently include a percentage of Sir Terence's pension, probably to the relief of the already outraged restaurateur.

The ex-wives of less exalted businessmen will be hard pressed to equal her achievement. But at least those who have supported their husbands' careers, rather than pursuing their own, now have the right to claim a share of their spouses' pensions on divorce.

However, those who stay married and do not pursue paid employment are still not entitled to save for their own pensions, a considerable injustice. The Inland Revenue insists that pension contributions are made from earnings. This rule leaves many wives, mothers and those caring for the elderly without provision for their own old age. They may not be entitled to state pensions in their own right and are dependent on the provision made by their spouses. This underpensioned group of women has now become the new target market for the insurance industry, anxious to show its caring face. The insurers have proposed that those in unpaid or low-paid employment have access to low-cost pensions (see page 37). The move, the insurers' contribution to the Government's plans for a citizen's pension, should arouse suspicions. Mindful of their poor reputation in government circles, the insurers wish to show that they can act responsibly with the nation's money. But those who saw how these companies treated public sector workers, enticing them from secure occupational schemes into poor-value personal plans, would be nervous about giving them free rein to approach another vulnerable group.

ANNE ASHWORTH
Personal Finance Editor

At variance

THE interest rate rise will speed the rush to fixed-rate mortgages. But those impressed by advantageous rates should ask about the extras. Nationwide, for example, obliges fixed-rate customers to take its house and contents insurance. The commission funds part of the discount.

Aspiring borrowers should also inquire about the lender's variable rate, which they will pay at the end of the fixed-rate period. Moneyfacts research shows that the interest repayments on a £50,000 loan between July 1996 and June 1997 varied between £3,398 at the Yorkshire Building Society and £3,698 at Bank of Ireland Mortgages.

Karen Zagor has a checklist for working wives heading for court

Get aboard early just in case

The way they were: from left, Sir Terence and Lady Conran, Paula Yates and Bob Geldof, the Duke and Duchess of York and the Prince and Princess of Wales

Sir Terence Conran has this week once more complained of the generosity of the £10.5 million divorce settlement to his former wife which he sees as an unfortunate precedent for future divorces. The judge held that Caroline Conran, a food writer, had played a crucial role in the success of the Conran design and restaurant empire. But Sir Terence has described the judgment as "Mills & Boon in style and riddled with inaccuracies".

The view of a marriage as a quasi-business partnership is not new. The royals, for example, often describe themselves as co-workers in the family firm. The success and high public profile of one partner can help the other's drive for fame, as illustrated by Paula Yates and Bob Geldof, another celebrity pairing which ended in the divorce courts last year.

Lady Conran might have spared herself a lot of worry in the run-up to the divorce if she had had the foresight to spell out her role in her husband's business from the start.

Frances Hughes, head of family law at Bates, Wells & Braithwaite, the solicitor, said: "Quite often a woman's contributions get lost because they tend to play behind-the-scenes roles in a business, acting as hostesses, giving advice and helping to arrange loans, but not actively running it."

A bit of careful planning in the halcyon days of a relationship is a sensible precaution in case things turn sour. If, like Lady Conran, you are an invisible force in your husband's business, there are ways of making sure your contributions are reflected on divorce. "A spouse's support can make a big difference to someone running a business. If you help behind the scenes, you should think about sharing some of the benefits, such as bonuses, as they come along," said Ms Hughes.

Wives also need to take account of their more concrete contributions. If you are going to be part of the business, then make sure you go along with your husband to see bank managers and lawyers. If you have helped to negotiate the company's financing, or were part of the planning and strategy stage of setting up a business, make sure your role is documented.

"Men tend to have the knowledge base because they are the ones actively running the business. But the more you know, the more secure your financial position will be if your marriage founders," she said. One way of ensuring access to the accounts and solidifying your involvement is to join the board. You must be voted on but there is no reason for a wife not to be on the board of a company she has helped to establish.

Once a divorce goes through, there is little chance to go back on arrangements

If you have an active role, make sure you are one of the directors when the company is established. Your specific responsibilities should be put on paper and there should be a contract of employment with a specific job description.

But there is no reason to be cut out if your role is less tangible. A supportive spouse can always be a non-executive director. This does not demand any responsibilities for the day-to-day running of a company but does carry certain responsibilities such as making sure it is being run in good faith. As a non-executive director you can receive fees and then be part of the company pension scheme.

Being on the board makes it easier to keep tabs on the company's finances. If your husband has run up big debts, you will find out about them more easily if you are on the board. And if the company is not being run in the shareholders' best interests, you can always resign.

The only downside is that, in law, you have a joint responsibility of running the company in a reasonable way. But if your spouse is running the company in a fraudulent way it is better to know," said Ms Hughes. If your marriage breaks down, some steps should be taken regardless of joint business arrangements. Joint accounts and joint credit-card accounts should be closed to prevent your ex from going on a spending spree. If possible, loans, overdrafts and HP agreements should be separated. If the family house is not in your name, put a charge on it, registering your right to occupy. This prevents your partner from quietly remortgaging or transferring it.

With a new Government in power, last year's Family Law Act is in question. This may mean further legislation will be sought for splitting of pension funds between spouses. Ms Hughes said: "Women still need to plan for old age. And there is also the danger that splitting the pension too early could reduce the pension fund." Most important is to make sure all is in order before seeking a decree absolute. Once a divorce goes through, it is harder to go back on financial arrangements.

You can buy performance.

It costs 17½ pence.

It costs you less than a Second Class stamp to invest the minimum monthly sum of £25 into the Foreign & Colonial Private Investor Plan. With its combination of performance, choice and low costs, it offers better value than any other savings and investment plans available. You can choose from our wide range of investment trusts, changing the frequency and the amount you invest without penalty. Why not find out more?

Growth of £1,000 invested in 1977
Foreign & Colonial Investment Trust PLC	Unit Trust Average	Building Society Average
1977	£1,000	£1,000
1982	£2,409	£1,816	£1,366
1987	£10,481	£7,222	£2,354
1992	£13,830	£7,880	£3,667
1997	£29,599	£15,371	£4,386

Phone 01734 825 803 or Fax 01734 344 622 any time quoting the coupon code, or return the coupon.

Foreign & Colonial

To: Foreign & Colonial Management Ltd, PO Box 2, Twyford, Berkshire RG10 9NW.

Name _____
Address _____
Town _____ County _____
Postcode _____ Code F12797

The value of shares and the income from them can fall as well as rise and you may not get back the full amount invested. Past performance is no guide to the future. All figures sourced Microcap: 30.06.77-30.06.97. Investment trust figures basic: mid-market prices, net income reinvested, incl. historical 3.5% national expenses. Actual Plan charges: 0.2% commission and 0.5% Govt. Stamp Duty. Building Society figures basic: highest net rate available from Microcap (£25,000+ Account based on total return, net income reinvested. Unit Trust figures basic: offer to offer, net income reinvested, incl. historical 3.5% national expenses. Foreign & Colonial Management Limited (regulated by IMRO and the Personal Investment Authority) or its subsidiaries are the Managers of the investment trusts.

PUT YOUR WINDFALL WITH A STAR PERFORMER

Jupiter unit trusts compared with sector averages and TESSA

Source Microcap. Offer to bid, net income reinvested, 5 years to 1.7.97
*UK Savings TESSA £3,000 investment index

Looking for long-term performance for your windfall? Put the shares into the Jupiter PEP and we will exchange them for units in your choice of Jupiter PEPable unit trusts.

Your choice can include one of our top-performing long-established funds (see table opposite), or our new Financial Opportunities Fund, specially designed to give windfall investors a well-chosen portfolio of shares across the flourishing financial sector.

You must invest at least £1,000 (including the proceeds of your windfall), or £50 per month. There are no costs other than the standard initial and annual charges for the unit trusts - and there's a 1% discount on lump sum PEP investments.

Turn your windfall into a nest-egg with Jupiter. Talk to your financial adviser, call us free or return the coupon.

JUPITER
Leaders in long-term performance

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL FREE ON 0500 0500 97

To: Investor Support, Jupiter Unit Trust Managers Ltd, Knightsbridge House, 187 Knightsbridge, London SW7 1RS.

Please send me further information on: The Jupiter Windfall PEP ☐ The Jupiter Financial Opportunities Fund ☐ Jupiter Unit Trusts ☐

Name (Mr/Mrs/Ms) _____ Address _____

Post Code _____ T112.07

Jupiter Unit Trust Managers Ltd is regulated by IMRO and the Personal Investment Authority. Member of ALTR: A subsidiary of Commerzbank AG, one of Germany's leading banks. "Windfall" shares will be accommodated in the Jupiter PEP. They must then be sold and the proceeds reinvested into Jupiter PEPable unit trusts. It should always be remembered that funds invested in TESSA accounts are not subject to fluctuations in value which could affect the various funds described. The value of an investment in a unit trust and the income from it can go down as well as up. It may be affected by exchange rate variations, and you may not get back the amount invested. Current tax levels and reliefs may change and their value will depend on your individual circumstances. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. Up to 100% of the annual management fee is to be taken from capital of Income Trust and High Income Fund. This may accordingly restrict capital growth. Copies of the half-yearly and annual reports may be obtained from Jupiter Unit Trust Managers Ltd, Knightsbridge House, 187 Knightsbridge, London SW7 1RS. Scheme particulars and key features documents may also be obtained from this address.

STRICTLY LIMITED OFFER

WINDFALL SHAREHOLDERS.

AN OFFER YOU CAN'T REFUSE.

If you hold Windfall share certificates, you've found the ideal home for them. We'll save you tax. We'll save you unnecessary charges. And we'll give you unrivalled options on what to do next. It's a highly competitive offer. For details, call now.

0800 40 30 30

http://www.prospect.co.uk

SAVE & PROSPER

DO NOT SEND MONEY TO PROSPER

The value of investments, and any income from them, can fall as well as rise and you may not get back the amount invested. Tax concessions can change and their value will depend on your circumstances. Save & Prosper Group is regulated by the Personal Investment Authority and IMRO. We only advise on products and services offered by the Flemings and Save & Prosper Marketing Group. 1862/037

FOR A PROFITABLE FUTURE MAKE CUTS HERE.

If you want the chance to be wealthy in the future, you should be making a few cuts now - all around our coupon.

Why? Because we can offer you a range of high performing funds, from the low risk UK Equity Fund, a top performing fund since launch*, to higher risk, specialised funds, such as the Pacific Growth Fund, up 170% over the last five years. And our Income Fund has increased its dividend each year over the last 15 years.

All you need to invest is the Schroder Investment Collection, your complete guide to all our funds. So pick up those scissors now - these could be the last cuts you ever need to make.

0800 002 000
Quoting ref 544

TO: SCHRODERS,
CUSTOMER SERVICES DEPT.,
0254 FREEMANTLE, LONDON W10,
LONDON EC4B 4PD.
Please send me my free copy of the Schroder Investment Collection. Alternatively, contact your usual Financial Adviser.

Name _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Date of Birth / / _____

From what source does your investment money usually come?

Salary ☐

Retirement package ☐

A switch from another investment ☐

Other (please state): _____

Source: Mirostat buying price to selling price; net income reinvested to 1.797. *From 1.1.72 (earliest figures available) 1113.

From 1.7.92, +172.5%.

Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. The value of investments and the income from them may fall as well as rise and investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

Issued by Schroder Investment Management Limited, Senator House, 85 Queen Victoria Street, London EC4V 4EA. Regulated by IMRO.

www.schroders.com

Schroders

Nathan Yates fears that many pensioners face a bleak future

Days of revolution

Shareholders in high-yielding investment trusts are likely to see their dividends guillotined in Gordon Brown's investment revolution. Analysts say high yielders face a bleak future after Budget measures. Many fear the Government's pursuit of "long termism" will place income investors on the block. Investment trusts which focus on maximum dividends are some of the best options for investors not seeking growth. Many of these are pensioners relying on their holdings to live. They can obtain a flow of returns from high income trusts, which pump up to 80 per cent of their assets into companies with large dividends, or from income shares in a split-capital trust. The latter divide their shares into different types to cater for different kinds of investor. In return for relinquishing capital growth, their income shares cream off most of the trust's dividend yields. Several Budget measures are likely to drive both dividends and the price of income shares down. "It would be difficult to imagine a worse Budget for high-yielding investment trusts," says Carolyn Coke of NatWest Securities.

Dividend tax credit: High-yielding trusts are among the biggest victims of the Chancellor's abolition of dividend tax credit. Their big dividends were formerly attractive to tax-exempt investors such as pension funds, which could claim 20 per cent extra on each payment. With this credit gone, dividends provided by income and split-capital trusts are now far less appealing. Demand is falling, and with falling demand come falling prices. Since the cut in dividend relief was forecast by The Times in May, figures by Mirostat show the price of high-income trusts has been kept to a 0.24 per cent rise, and the income shares of split-capital funds have dropped by 3.18 per cent. Any decrease in dividends will become apparent more slowly. Some high yielders are suffering a tax relief "double whammy" because of their income-focused portfolios. Shares in companies concentrating on short-term gain are tipped to fall after the loss of DTC.

Trusts are going to have to throw out some of their junky no-growth stocks, again damaging their ability to maintain income levels," Ms Coke says. A report by HSBC James Capel identifies several trusts with vulnerable holdings facing a double DTC blow, including Shires Income, Glasgow Income, Merchants, Invesco Convertible, Temple Bar, Morgan Grenfell Equity Income and Foreign & Colonial Income Growth.

Foreign income dividends: before the Budget, companies with a large slice of foreign earnings were permitted to pay all or part of their dividends under the foreign income dividends (Fid) scheme, which exempted them from the 20 per cent advance corporation tax (ACT) charge. The Fid scheme has been closed, and ACT will now have to be paid on dividends from investment trusts with big holdings abroad. Again, the trusts most vulnerable to the effects of this change will be those which focus on income.

High-income unit trusts generally yield less than their investment trust equivalents, but some of these are also likely to be hit by Budget measures. Foreign & Colonial High Income, Morgan Grenfell High Income and Exeter High Income are among the unit trusts which place a heavy emphasis on yield at the expense of capital growth.

Limited Issue - Capital Guaranteed Bond

30% capital growth after 3 years (equivalent to 11.3% p.a. gross) or failing that

150% FT-SE growth after 6 years with no upper limit

RJ TEMPLE PLC 01278 821177 (4 hrs)
FREEPOST (BR 1867) BRIGTON BN1 1ZZ
Regulated by the Personal Investment Authority

37.8% GROWTH IN JUST 2 YEARS FROM MARKS & SPENCER

UK 100 COMPANIES FUND PEP

GROWTH FROM
31ST MAY 1995 TO 30TH MAY 1997

Past performance is no guarantee of future performance.

You can invest any amount from a minimum of £1,000 to a maximum of £6,000 per person per tax year with all benefits tax-free*. There is no initial charge and no exit charge and you can have easy access to your money at all times.

For full details of how you could make your money work harder for you, including an application form and terms and conditions, simply call free today on

0800 363451 quoting reference code P018

Lines are open 8am to 8pm weekdays, 9am to 5pm weekends.

MARKS & SPENCER FINANCIAL SERVICES

The value of units and the income from them can go down as well as up.

Marks & Spencer Unit Trust Management Limited. Regulated by the Personal Investment Authority. Registered Office: Michael House, Baker Street, London W1A 1DN. Registered in England: 2253009. A subsidiary of Marks & Spencer plc. Marks & Spencer Unit Trust Management Limited is a part of the Marks & Spencer Financial Services.

* You can invest up to £6,000 in each tax year in a General PEP. Any tax deducted from your income is claimed back from the Inland Revenue on your behalf and any gain you make when selling your PEP is also tax-free. The Fund is exempt from Capital Gains Tax, but pays tax on any income it receives. The tax treatment of PEPs may be changed by future legislation. The value of any tax benefits will depend upon your individual financial circumstances.

 Performance is calculated for the 2 year period from 31/5/95 to 30/5/97 (launch date 1/5/95). UK 100 Companies Fund performance takes account of all charges and the difference in the price at which you can buy and sell units with all income reinvested and without the deduction of tax. Tessa performance is based on the average of a large selection of Tessa's available for the whole period excluding Tessa accounts for which bonus schemes are applicable. The performance of deposit-based savings is based on the return from the Halifax Solid Gold 30 Day account. Source: HSBC. Money placed in a building society deposit account will not fall in value, unlike stock market based investments such as unit trusts where you may not get back the amount invested. However as you can see in the chart above, unit trust based investment has outperformed these accounts in the past.

President's Week WINNER of Fixed Interest Unit Trusts '97

Avg. Building Society Account
4.7%+

M&G Corporate Bond Fund PEP
6.5%*

THE M&G CORPORATE BOND FUND compared against other corporate bond funds*

If you want a sensible way to earn a higher income than a bank or building society, with the added advantage of being tax free, take out a Personal Equity Plan invested in the M&G Corporate Bond Fund, the UK's number one in its sector since launch (April 1994).

This Fund has been the top performing corporate bond fund over the last three years, and offers you:

- An immediate high income
- No initial charge
- No withdrawal fee (after 5 years)

Following the recent Budget, a PEP still provides you with the ability to save within a tax free environment - so why not apply to M&G today! For further information on The M&G Corporate Bond PEP Fund, call 0345 321 011 (Lines are open 24 hours, 7 days a week) or return the coupon below.

To: The M&G Group, Bristol BS38 7ET. Please send me information on The M&G Corporate Bond PEP Fund

NO SALESMAN WILL CALL. You should contact your independent financial adviser (if you have one) before investing. The price of investments and the income from them can go down as well as up. The value to you of the tax benefits will depend on your own circumstances. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. The Chancellor has announced that there will be changes to the tax regime with effect from 6th April 1999.

MR/MRS/MISS/MS INITIAL(S) _____ SURNAME _____

ADDRESS _____

POSTCODE _____ LS-EC88

M&G do not offer investment advice or offer any recommendations regarding investments. We only market the packaged products and services of the M&G marketing group.

*Source: Office of National Statistics. Average retail share and deposits as at April 1997. Source: M&G Statistics. The estimated gross redemption yield for the M&G Corporate Bond Fund held within The M&G PEP as at 27.06.97 was 5.5%, and the gross distribution yield was 6.8%. For up-to-date figures please call 01245 390 390. *Source: Mirostat £1,000 invested in the above companies since launch date (except Barclays UK Fixed Interest, £1,188.00; 10.95% Barclays, £1,480.00; Perpetual - £1,211.00; 10.08% and Virgin - £1,211.00; 10.05%). All figures are calculated as at 01.07.97, offer to bid with net income reinvested. Source: Mirostat UK Corporate Bonds sector. These figures do not take into account any additional PEP charges. Holdings of The M&G Corporate Bond Fund within the M&G PEP pay an additional annual PEP charge of 0.25% (1997).

Issued by M&G Financial Services Limited, regulated by The Personal Investment Authority. Registered address: M&G House, Victoria Road, Cheltenham CM1 1FB. <http://www.mg.co.uk/mg>. We never make your name and address available to unconnected organisations. We will occasionally tell you about other products or services offered by ourselves and associated M&G companies.

Managing your money for the longer term

Tick this box ☐ if you would prefer not to receive this information.

Adam Jones says the institutional rush into tracker funds should not unduly sway private investors

STEPHEN MARKESON

Are they on the wrong track?

The continuing bull market in London has left a question mark hanging over tracker funds. These investment vehicles are designed to reproduce the return you would receive if you had shares in all the companies in the FTSE 100, or a similar index. The attraction is cheapness compared with traditional active fund management, which can often produce poor returns in spite of the huge pay packets of the managers.

While index-tracking has led to impressive recent gains, there has been understandable anxiety over how the funds would perform in a general market decline. Active fund managers have the chance of picking a stock which bucks the market trend. Tracker funds have no such recourse and most financial advisers have suggested caution. One would therefore expect take-up of trackers to be quite low in the first half of this year. This is not so.

Sales to the public have never been so buoyant. The end of the financial year is a traditional boom period for Pep funds. In March, the amount of public money directly tied up in tracker unit trusts, the most common form of index-tracking investment, increased by nearly £170 million.

In April, this figure was nearly £300 million, more than twice the figure for the previous April. The general election was a big factor. Many expected Gordon Brown to abolish Peps and were maximising holdings. Surprisingly, retail sales in May, the last month for which there is market-wide information from the Association of Unit Trusts and Investment Funds, have not fallen off as much as may have been expected.

Tony Wood of Virgin Direct, which now has about £750 million of client money tracking the FTSE All-Share, says sales have increased substantially in June and July.

This suggests that fears of a big market collapse are less widespread than some pundits anticipated or that the marketing campaigns by companies like Virgin are working. Tony Wood prefers to think that investors are taking a long-term view.

What is more surprising is the demand from institutions such as pension funds and insurers, who include trackers in their broad portfolios alongside direct stakes in companies, property investments and other financial instruments.

Institutional behaviour is seen as a guide by many cautious private investors. The anxiety you may feel when committing a few thousand pounds to a Pep fund will be nothing compared with the weight of responsibility oppressing the manager of a multibillion-pound pension portfolio.

Pension fund managers, like Tony Dye of PDEM, will sometimes take a high-profile stand on where they expect the market to be going. Mr Dye began scaling down equity holdings in favour of cash in 1995 (and has seen the markets confound his bearish prediction ever since).

Institutional buying of tracker funds has tended to reflect this caution. The net amount of institutional money going into tracker unit trusts only exceeded £30 million twice in the period from January 1996 to April 1997. On several occasions there was a net outflow of money.

However, in May 1997 more than £100 million net went into tracker funds from institutions. Ian Chimes, managing director of Credit Suisse investment funds, says this also reflects a post-election change in thinking.

In the pre-election war of words, one of the most potent fears that the Conservative Party could arouse was that a Labour election victory would spark a market correction (the polite term for a near-crash).

Quite the opposite has happened and institutions have ditched their wait-and-see policy. They are also using trackers to get exposure to the surging performance of banks and insurers. With flotations and demutualisations, these companies are starting to dominate the FTSE 100 and have driven the index's growth, which has often not filtered down to smaller companies.

Mr Chimes says buying into a tracker means institutions can have exposure to the surging financial sector without becoming too vulnerable to a change in market sentiment against the shares, currently seen as expensive against their bottom-line earnings. He says: "They wanted to make sure they didn't miss out on the financials party."

Private investors should therefore not regard this institutional interest as evidence that professional fund managers have changed their tune and are now confident that the market is bound to climb to even more dizzying heights.

If you have just a single Pep, caution is necessary, although trackers are accepted as a backbone for a broad portfolio. Buyers should also be very careful in choosing their fund as the index tracked will vary. This can mean a big difference in performance and accounts for the absence of Virgin Direct, which follows the performance of the weaker FTSE All-Share index, from our list of top-performing unit trusts.

TOP TRACKERS

FUND RISE (%) 1/7/96-1/7/97

Fidelity MoneyBuilder	29.36
HSCB The Footsie Fund	28.82
CU UK Index Tracking	28.61
Lloyds Bank FTSE 100	28.48
River & Mercantile Top 100	28.40
Midland FTSE 100 Index	28.38
Direct Line FTSE 100 Tracker	28.23
Sovereign FTSE 100	27.92
Legal & Gen UK Stockmarket	27.65
Barclays Unicorn FTSE 100	27.60

All funds track FTSE 100. All figures are based on bid-to-bid with £100 initial sum

Source: Micropal

WITH 35% MORE FOR MY OLD ENDOWMENT AND NO FEES, I'M IN THE PINK.

PolicyPlus can settle up to 35% more than the surrender value of your old endowment in just 10 hours, guaranteed for anyone who switches to PolicyPlus. Get in the pink. If your 'with profits' policy is over 7 years old, with a surrender value of more than £7,000, telephone now with your policy details.

0800 558 557

Lines open 24 hrs a day, 7 days a week. See Internet 541/2.

PolicyPlus

TRUST SERVICES LTD

3-4 Hovey Street, Bath, BA1 1EE

Member of the AIFMD and regulated by the Financial Services Authority. 100% of funds are held in the UK.

PRUDENTIAL

More than 1.75 million households have put their home insurance in the safe hands of Prudential.

Now, if you do the same, not only can you save pounds on your premiums, but you can also stretch the cost over 12 months when you pay by direct debit - with no extra charge.

In fact, the average saving for customers who switch to Prudential is £100. So don't miss out on cheaper premiums - call us now for a free quote and a free home security video.

You'll see why over 90% of our customers renewed their policies with Prudential last year.

For a free quote and a free home security video ring

0800 300 300

PRUDENTIAL

Lines are open from 9pm Monday to Friday, 9am to 5pm Saturday and 11am to 5pm Sunday. For your protection, calls on this number will be recorded. Please note, in some cases we may not be able to provide a quote. Please quote reference PRS 938.

Are you getting 4.25% interest on your current account?

CITIBANK 4.25% gross

NatWest 2% gross

First Direct 0.3% gross

Barclays 4.35% gross

Windsor 1.2% gross

PC Banking, free 24 hour phone banking and worldwide service with an unbeatable interest rate. Call us anytime on 0800 00 88 00 or visit our website <http://www.citibank.co.uk>.

CITIBANK THE CITI NEVER SLEEPS.

influential

If you are too, we should talk.

Kleinwort Benson PRIVATE BANK

To talk, call 0800 317477

KBPB is a Division of Kleinwort Benson Investment Management Limited and is regulated by DMO. Member of the Dresdner Bank Group.

Insurers pave way for universal pension age

Marianne Curphey on a radical plan to provide self-financed retirement benefits for the masses

A radical new proposal to create a universal pension for the 21st century based on Labour's "stakeholder" savings plan has been unveiled by insurance companies.

The proposals include the reform of the tax treatment of pensions to enable mothers who have taken a break from work to raise children or who are caring for sick or elderly relatives at home to build up a fund. People would also be allowed to contribute to more than one scheme and those with very low or no earnings could be given incentives to save.

The Association of British Insurers spent six months consulting its 430 members and drew up a plan under which even the unemployed could contribute towards their own pension.

The universal second pension would supplement, and in time, perhaps replace, the state pension scheme. It would run parallel to but not replace occupational schemes.

This would involve reform because current Inland Revenue rules stipulate that pension premiums must be paid out of earned income.

The scheme has the support of Standard Life, the biggest life insurer in Europe, which believes that the current tax rules need to be reviewed. Peter Robertson, its assistant general manager of marketing, said the proposals needed to be sold on a "low margin rather than no margin" basis. He also believes discussions are needed to clarify how the new pension will run alongside existing provision.

The ABI's plan is based on the principle behind the US Individual Retirement Account, which is fully portable from job to job. The ABI believes that employers should contribute to the personal pension plans of individual staff.

The proposals are likely to strike a chord with the Government, which is looking to develop a "citizenship pension" to allow mothers and people caring for sick or elderly relatives to build up a fund.

A spokesman for the Department of Social Security and pensions minister John Denham said that the fund would be based on credits from an individual's national insurance contributions.

The simple design of the pension blueprint has more similarities with tax-exempt special savings accounts (Tessas) than pensions. It might offer tax relief at 50 per cent on the first £500 of contributions to encourage the low-paid to start saving. Further premiums up to a maximum of £3,000 a year would qualify for tax relief at the individual's highest rate.

The ABI envisages a product based on a simple fund tracking the performance of the FTSE All-Share index, plus exposure to index-linked gilts. People would be able to transfer to a rival provider every three years, without penalty.

The ABI believes the policy should be unit-linked and should have an annual management charge of no more than 1 per cent. It recognises that some form of compulsion may be necessary.

At present insurance companies and bancassurance managers £170 billion of personal pensions on behalf of six million investors. Tessa has attracted £20 billion worth of funds and personal equity plans (Peeps) have brought in an estimated £35 billion.

Mark Bolat, director-general of the ABI, believes the stakeholder pension could initially attract an extra £5 billion to £10 billion a year. He said: "This is a low-margin, high-volume product designed to appeal to the masses. It needs to be cheap, simple and transparent. The quite arbitrary limits on how much people can put into their pension each year are now inappropriate in the light of changing social and employment patterns."

The ABI believes that people should be allowed to contribute to a pension whatever their yearly income, so that even if they move jobs frequently, they will have some security in old age.

It is particularly concerned that, on average, women who give up work to raise children and then return never achieve the same real salary they earned before.

While male manual earnings in the UK peak between 40 and 49 years of age, women's average salaries peak while they are still in their twenties and before they start a family.

Women who give up work to raise children and then return never achieve the same real salary they earned before

Annuity delay could prove costly

Those who have retired but not yet bought an annuity with their pension fund must act now or suffer a 10 per cent drop in their pension income for the rest of their lives.

A £100,000 pension fund which would now buy an annuity paying a guaranteed income of £10,000 a year will produce only £9,000 in three months' time, according to Billy Burrows of Annuity Direct, the independent adviser.

Changes in last week's Budget, which drastically reduced the value of pension funds by removing tax breaks on equity investment, will have a knock-on effect on annuity rates. Gilt yields, on which annuity rates are based, will fall as pension funds looking for alternative forms of investment push up gilt prices, says Mr Burrows. The falls will mean further cuts in pensioners' incomes, which have already been falling steadily from their high of 15.6 per cent in the third quarter of 1990 to around 10 per cent now. Under current pension rules, people have to use three quarters of their pension fund to buy an annuity when they retire, which pays an income for life. Those who buy when rates are low are locked into a low income.

Recent rule changes have allowed people who retire when rates are low to hold off buying an annuity until they can get a better deal. While they wait they can draw income from their pensions. They have to buy an annuity when they are 75.

But this time the same Budget changes which will hit annuity rates will also hit those drawing income from pension funds. Such funds will no longer be able to claim tax breaks, cutting investment returns by up to 1 per cent a year. Mr Burrows describes this as a "double whammy" for pensioners who will end up using smaller pension funds to buy worse annuities.

SARA MCCONNELL

Progress from Century Life

The Crown Life pension affair, which affected over 100,000 members in more than 5,500 schemes, is close to resolution. Century Life, the insurance company, which took over the Crown pension scheme portfolio between October 1992 and April 1993, says that it has now provided scheme trustees with figures setting out the pension benefits available in 96.6 per cent of cases. Some 49 per cent of individual members now know how much they can expect to receive and Century says that the majority of schemes are now in surplus.

Many of the pensioners were in small, final salary company schemes which had been hit by the recession and were being wound up when Century Life took over the administrative nightmare in 1992-93. In 800 cases, there were no scheme trustees so in August 1994 Century started the legal process of applying to the High Court for the appointment of an independent professional trustee to 547 schemes with some 7,800 members.

Over the past few years Century Life has made real progress in sorting out members' entitlements and this accelerated progress is expected to be acknowledged by the Pensions Ombudsman in his report due later this month. The progress was achieved by Century forming a steering committee consisting of the DTL, Contracted Out Employment Group (COEG), Occupational Pensions Board (OPB), Pensions Ombudsman's Office and Occupational Pensions Advisory Service (OPAS) to work together to resolve the problems encountered for the benefit of members. In the past, Dr Julian Farrand, the Ombudsman, has been critical of the Crown Life situation.

The problems that faced Century in its efforts to sort out the schemes and their benefits lay principally in the bureaucratic muddle bequeathed by Crown, a business which was better at marketing pension schemes than in handling the essential administration.

According to Century, the paper files and computer records passed over at the takeover were in a "poor state". Investment records for the schemes were incomplete and data on scheme members did not always reconcile with information held by the OPB and COEG, the regulatory bodies.

Century says that the schemes arrived with 11,500 items of outstanding post, 13 weeks' worth of mail. Information from 17 different computer systems had to be transferred on to a new single system. A special computer link was established to COEG.

Other problems were the result of the recession having driven many companies out of business. Around 90 per cent of the Crown Life schemes, covering 80,000 members, were in the process of being wound up when they passed into Century's control.

Many schemes did not have an effective trustee to take responsibility for communicating with members and representing their interests in the winding up. In the majority of cases, the employer had acted as sole trustee and was no longer on the scene. This left Century without the authority to settle benefits and led to the innovative court application for a corporate trustee, PAN Trustee Services Ltd, to be appointed.

Century will now apply to the new Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority to appoint independent trustees to a further 107 schemes. The winding up of the portfolio should be completed by the end of the year.

ANNE ASHWORTH

PEP Paradise

Invest in the best stockmarket
— with hindsight

Johnson Fry's
20/20 Hindsight

Tracks stockmarket indices in the US, the UK and Japan

Allocates 50% of your investment to the best performing index

Provides full return of capital

Removes currency risk

JF Johnson Fry

PEP and/or direct share investment

For further information on 20/20 Hindsight, return this coupon to: Johnson Fry Securities Limited, 20 Regent Street, London SW1Y 4PZ.

Name _____ Address _____ Postcode _____

20/20 Tim 137

* In addition, 20/20 Hindsight allocates 30% of your investment to the second best performing index and 20% to the third best performing index.

Important Note: This advertisement is issued by Johnson Fry Securities Limited, regulated by SFA and a Member of the London Stock Exchange. It relates to a proposed issue of shares of a company which will be listed on the Irish Stock Exchange. It is intended that the company will invest in fixed income investments issued by financial institutions. In order to provide growth linked to the performance of stockmarkets, it is intended that the company will enter into option transactions with a major global investment bank. The price of the shares of the company may go down as well as up. The shares should not be subscribed for by persons who may require the return of their investment within 20 years of the date of issue of shares. No guarantee is given that investors will receive back the amount paid for the shares. The return to investors may be adversely affected if any member of, or any party to, any dealing in securities, defaults in its obligations to the company. An investment in the shares of the company may not be suitable for everyone and, if you have any doubts, you should seek independent financial advice. The levels and bases of tax relief relating to PEPs may change. The value of such relief depends on an investor's circumstances.

PENSIONS BY PHONE

24 hours a day... 7 days a week... Now you can pick up the phone and get pensions information or advice and even set up a plan, quickly and without fuss.

0345 6789 10

or talk to your Independent Financial Adviser

SCOTTISH WIDOWS

Sara McConnell explains why more homeowners are becoming landlords and how best to go about it

Renaissance in renting takes off

The rising housing market and more relaxed letting rules are tempting increasing numbers of homeowners to rent rather than sell their homes if they need to move for work or personal reasons.

The Small Landlords' Association (SLA) has seen queries from would-be landlords double as people realise they do not have to go through the expense and hassle of selling, particularly if they are moving temporarily and expect to return. If they rent, they will not only save on moving costs but they will be able to continue taking advantage of rising prices. House prices have risen by up to 11 per cent on average over the past year.

Changes in tenancy agreements earlier this year have also eliminated the risk of inadvertently signing over the property to a sitting tenant.

Gareth Hardwick, secretary of the SLA, says: "We have had substantial numbers of inquiries from people wishing to let for the first time."

Some may not need a property if they move jobs because there is a tied cottage which goes with the job. If the current occupant of Britain's most famous tied cottage, No 10 Downing Street, had rented his Islington home rather than putting the five-bedroom house on the market last month for £615,000, he could have expected a rental income of around £800 a week, according to Winkworth, the estate agent. The value of the house would also have continued to rise — not a small consideration in Islington, where prices have risen 25 per cent in the last two years.

But renting is by no means stress-free. Bad tenants, unscrupulous letting agents and problems with lenders have all been exposed in The Times, not least in the case of Helen Kara on this page. Here are some action points:

■ Ask your lender. Many landlords are tempted not to ask their lender's permission before renting because it involves extra administration and expense. But technically you are breaking your mortgage agreement if you rent without permission, and the lender would have the right to repossess.

A Times survey of major lenders revealed that charges for checking tenancy agreements and giving the go-ahead range from nothing at the Halifax to up to £102 at the Bradford & Bingley. The B&B claimed that it only rarely levied this charge in "complex cases" and that most people paid nearer the minimum charge of £25. Some lenders, including the Nationwide, Bristol & West and Britannia, charge an extra fee every time you get a new tenant. Others insist that you go through a letting agent rather than advertising in your local paper.

Lenders have become more relaxed about renting, mainly because the rules governing tenancy agreements have improved (see below). But some, including the Birmingham Midshires, Bradford & Bingley and Bristol & West, add up to 1 per cent to your normal mortgage rate.

■ Tell your insurers. Your insurer can refuse to pay out on a claim if you have not told the company you are renting. You may face higher premiums, particularly on contents insurance, or you may have to find another insurer altogether. If you are a leaseholder, you must tell your freeholder, otherwise you may be in breach of your lease.

■ Check your letting agreement. You used to have to make sure you did not unwittingly sign an assured tenancy agreement, which effectively landed you with a sitting tenant. But since February this year all new agreements have had to be assured short-term tenancies, which allow you as landlord to get your tenants out after six months.

■ Use a reputable agent. If you use an agent, check that he or she is a member of the Association of Residential Letting Agents. Members have to have been trading for two years. They also have to have professional indemnity insurance. Client money and deposits have to be kept in a separate account from the general business account. Agents charge a commission of 10 per cent of your rent for introducing tenants and 15 per cent for managing property. If you are far from home this is the most sensible option.

Additional research by Penny Staniszek.

Bank has change of heart over tenancy refusal

A homeowner who has been battling with Lloyds Bank for nearly three months for permission to rent out her London flat finally won her fight this week after the intervention of The Times (Sara McConnell writes).

Helen Kara, who has been unemployed for two years, applied for and got a part-time job in Staffordshire after the bank had told her she could rent out her flat in Peckham, southeast London. She could afford to take the job only if she could get rent to cover her mortgage. She made a point of checking this with the bank. "I played by the book," she said.

She found a tenant, sent Lloyds a copy of the tenancy agreement and signed off at the Department of Social Security. But just days before she was due to leave London, Lloyds told her she could not rent out her flat.

The bank argued that she was in arrears on her loan, although the same letter giving her permission to rent three months previously had also notified her of her arrears, which she had subsequently paid in full.

Ms Kara, now settled into a country cottage a world away from southeast London, had to move to Staffordshire as arranged, still liable for her London mortgage.

But after being contacted by The Times, Lloyds Bank agreed to allow her to rent out her London property, reviewing the arrangement after six months. It also promised to pay compensation covering this month's mortgage payment plus a sum for distress.

Cashing in your Endowment Policy?

More than money.

Market leading prices and service with a free 48 hour quote.

London/South: 01622 851233 Midlands: 0121 788 2500

North: 0113 239 1942 Scotland: 0141 953 4321

Call today, lines always open.

Beale Dobie & Company Limited

Financial Services Group Plc

AP Remitted by the Financial Services Authority

Please quote T103.

Beale Dobie

Financial Services Group Plc

Member of the Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Financial Services Group Plc

Fixed-rate mortgages still available

Abbey National, Cheltenham & Gloucester and Northern Rock reacted quickly to this week's rise in interest rates. They all added the 0.25 per cent increase, bringing their rates to 8.2 per cent for borrowers with an average £50,000 mortgage. Other lenders, such as the Halifax, Woolwich and Nationwide Building Society, are reviewing their rates. However, the Nationwide did cut its discounts on the variable rate. Paradoxically, the third increase imposed since the May is good news for borrowers seeking to fix their mortgage payments. The financial markets expect the Bank to raise interest rates from their new level up to 7.5 per cent this year, but believe rates will come down again in the second half of 1998 as the Bank reduces inflation. Ian Darby, marketing director at John Charcol, said: "Thursday's rise does not mean the wholesale withdrawal of fixed-rate mortgages. On the contrary, the rise does nothing to change the cost of long-term borrowing for lenders. However, it does change the sentiment of borrowers and there is likely to be more demand for these deals."

Nationwide has already proved the strength of this argument by cutting its five-year fixed mortgage to 7.59 per cent for new borrowers and 7.49 per cent for existing borrowers who are moving. However, this is still an unexceptional rate compared with other lenders. Abbey National's best rate is also 7.49 per cent and, unlike the Nationwide, it does not require borrowers to take out its buildings and contents insurance. Phillip Cartwright of London & Country Mortgages says Nationwide's existing two-year fixed rate of 6.49 per cent is better because it does not lock in borrowers beyond the two years and it refunds valuation and arrangement costs on completion. If you are seeking to remortgage, Mr Cartwright says the big lenders will not give you as good a deal as they do to buyers. The best deals currently come from small building societies, such as Coventry, The Principality (in Wales) and Epsom-based National Counties. The latter has a two-year deal fixed at 7.39 per cent with a 1.75 per cent discount until August 1999. Compared with the average rate of 7.95 per cent, this represents a monthly saving of more than £100 for borrowers with a £60,000 mortgage.

GAVIN LUMSDEN

HAVE YOU EVER CONSIDERED BECOMING A LANDLORD?

"IT'S EASIER THAN YOU THINK WITH THE WOOLWICH"

Our new "Buy to Let" product is a tailor made mortgage and insurance package designed for private individuals wishing to purchase a property for investment.

We are able to offer competitive terms and through our streamlined telephone based service provide the highest levels of professionalism and customer care.

If you would like to find out more about this exciting new product call us, at local rate, Monday to Friday 8.30 am - 9.00 pm Saturday 9.00 am - 3.00 pm Sunday 10.00 am - 2.00 pm on 0345 45 44 45 quoting ref: TBL127. For your security, telephone conversations may be recorded.

WOOLWICH

DIRECT

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT.

A first charge over the property will be required as security for a mortgage. For interest only loans you are advised to arrange a suitable repayment vehicle to repay the capital at the end of the mortgage term. All mortgages are subject to status and valuation and a minimum age 18. A written quotation is available on request. Woolwich Direct is a service provided by Woolwich plc. Registered office: Watlington Street, Brackleyham, Kent DA6 7RR. Registered no. 1256693. Woolwich plc represents only Woolwich Life and Woolwich Unit Trust Managers which are regulated by the Prudential Regulation Authority for life assurance and unit trust business. Woolwich plc adheres to the principles of the Code of Mortgage Lending Practice. Copies of the Code are available on request.

Scottish Legal Life Growth Bond

Did you watch your money grow by 16.4% pa?

You could have watched your savings grow by 16.4% pa if you had been able to invest in the Scottish Legal Life Growth Bond 5 years ago

This outstanding growth potential is no fairy tale, it's available now from Scottish Legal Life with the added security that we guarantee no loss of capital at the end of five years. In addition, we also offer bonus units on the fifth anniversary on investments over £5,000. With an offer this good, it's worth acting now to make your money work harder for you.

It's available now and to find out more all you need to do to take advantage is telephone our Freephone number between 9am-6pm Monday-Friday and we will send you our free, easy to understand brochure and application form. Alternatively contact your Independent Financial Adviser.

0800 77 99 88

* Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. The value of your investment may fluctuate and is not guaranteed to meet the target. Source: Price information for Scottish Legal Life Growth Bond supplied by Scottish Legal Life Investment Managers, based on £5,000 invested, offer to end 31/12/97.

SCOTTISH LEGAL LIFE
Established 1852

AGED 40? WANT TO RETIRE AT 55? ONLY 180 PAY PACKETS LEFT.

Frightening isn't it? But it needn't be if you start planning for your retirement with Abbey Life now. To begin with we'll send you a free independent Complete Guide to Personal Pensions. Written by Jenny Harris, a leading financial journalist, it's a useful first step. For your free guide and an information pack call us now. Or, return the coupon.

0800 20 20 40

Return to Abbey Life, PO Box 61, FREEPOST NW5 907, London NW1 0YP
Reference: PEN1118

Name: _____ Initials: _____ (Mr, Mrs, Miss, Ms, other)

Address: _____

Postcode: _____ Date of Birth: _____

Complete the box:

Consent to contact: _____

We may send you information about other products and services offered by Abbey Life Insurance Group. If you would prefer not to receive this, please tick the box. ☐ Yes ☐ No

AbbeyLife PENSIONS

Abbey Life Assurance Company Limited, Registered office: 80 Hatherly Road, Bournemouth, BH4 6AL. Registered in England No. 710582. Abbey Life Assurance Company Limited is regulated by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is a member of the ABI.

Sara McConnell on a 12-year burden for borrowers who sold short

Lesley Mobbs was faced with a £200,000 building society demand despite being dependent on state benefits

Lenders' hard line on repossession debt

Borrowers whose homes were repossessed and sold at a shortfall during the recession will not be allowed to escape their debts, lenders have warned this week.

Growing number of borrowers are being chased only now for repayment of debts incurred in the depths of the recession. Many were lulled into a false sense of security after hearing nothing for several years, and assumed that the debt had been written off.

But the Council of Mortgage Lenders says its members have up to 12 years to demand repayment and are within their rights to act. It argues that lenders only targeted people whose circumstances had improved since they were repossessed. "If a lender feels it is realistic to pursue a borrower for a shortfall they will. If a borrower's financial situation changes it would be reasonable to pursue them." The longer the delay in paying off the debt, the more expensive it will be, as interest and charges continue to roll up.

Lenders have been known to use a number of methods to update themselves on the finances of former borrowers, including checking credit reference agency records and hiring private detectives. They deny that they chase people unless they know that they can pay.

In at least one case, however, a lender is demanding nearly £200,000 from a family living on state benefits. After a five-year silence, the Cheltenham & Gloucester, now the mortgage arm of Lloyds Bank, contacted Weekend Money readers Phil and Lesley Mobbs, asking them to pay back the shortfall incurred after their Warwickshire home was repossessed in April 1991.

C&G repossessed and sold the Mobbses' home after they fell nine months in arrears on their mortgage. The lender refused requests from Mr and Mrs Mobbs to allow them to sell it, and put it on the market at £450,000 in July 1991. It was sold in December for £300,000, leaving a shortfall of £150,000. This has grown to £197,000, including interest and costs.

The lender suggested to Mrs Mobbs that she pay off the debt at £500 a month. When Mrs Mobbs said she was on state benefits and could not afford to pay, C&G asked her parents to put up £50,000.

Shortly after The Times contacted the C&G on Mrs Mobbs's behalf, the lender suddenly withdrew its demands but made clear that it would continue to monitor her financial situation.

Mrs Mobbs says: "This means that the C&G are going to stalk us and any time we might be able to find decent jobs or buy a house, they will take the money".

C&G argues that it was trying to negotiate a "reasonable amount" in repayments from the Mobbses. "We are quite willing to negotiate." It freely admits it takes a hardline approach on arrears. "We are definitely active on arrears and try to get in before they become serious."

The National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux said it was unusual for lenders to target people on benefit. "Sometimes if people are on income support the lender will back off. But people know that if they get a job they will be chased again."

TAX RELIEF FOR THE OVER 60s. DON'T WORRY.

If you're over 60 and have private medical insurance, you'll be only too aware of the recent loss in tax relief. What you might not be aware of however is that BUPA has been working on ways to minimise your loss since the beginning of the year.

If you're an existing BUPA member, don't worry, there's already a letter in the post explaining the various options available, along with details of your own special tax relief helpline number.

If you're not a BUPA member but would like to find out how BUPA could help to protect you, call free on 0800 289577 Mon-Fri 8am-8pm.

You're amazing. We want you to stay that way. BUPA

LONDON · OXFORD · BRISTOL · EXETER · BOURNEMOUTH · PORTSMOUTH · BRIGHTON

Young Ridgway & Associates Limited are specialists in providing advice and guidance for people who wish to make the most from their retirement.

We provide completely independent advice as to how you can achieve the

MAXIMUM INCOME & CAPITAL GROWTH

from your investments necessary to maintain your standard of living and to protect your capital.

Young Ridgway & Associates Ltd are regulated by the Personal Investment Authority and are authorised to provide you with all the information you need. If you are approaching retirement you should find the time to complete and return this coupon - no stamp required - and we will send you a free copy of our 'Retirement Planning Guide' which will give you the information you need to know.

YRA Young Ridgway & Associates Ltd
Independent Financial Advice

FREEPOST - 10 Borelli Yard, Farnham, Surrey GU9 7BR.
Telephone 01252 727122

Planning For Retirement?

Please send me a FREE copy of your 'Retirement Planning Guide' brochure

Name (Mr/Ms/Miss) _____

Address _____

Post Code _____

Telephone Number _____

I am retired Yes ☐ No ☐ I intend to retire in _____ months/years

YRA
Young Ridgway & Associates Ltd
Independent Financial Advice

Regulated by the Personal Investment Authority

YORK · MANCHESTER · CHESTER · NOTTINGHAM · BIRMINGHAM · CARDIFF · LIVERPOOL

Tax relief on private medical insurance for the over 60's may have been cut.

But Exeter can heal the wound.

Despite the government's decision to abolish tax relief for those over sixty you can still find affordable private medical insurance with Exeter Friendly Society.

That's because we make a policy of never increasing your subscriptions simply because you get older.

Indeed, the age you join at is the age you stay at.

In addition, over the last three years our subscriptions have, on average, increased at about half the rate of those of many other leading insurers.

We are able to keep costs down because as a friendly society we have no shareholders to pay and all surpluses are used to improve benefits for our Members.

So don't let Mr Brown's cut get you down. Do your own cost cutting by getting details of our 50+ Plan.

REMEMBER-THE AGE YOU JOIN AT IS THE AGE YOU STAY AT.

THE EFFECT OF AGE RELATED INCREASES WHEN YOU JOIN AT AGE 50.

	EXETER FRIENDLY SOCIETY	SIMILAR PLAN FROM ANOTHER INSURER	ANNUAL SAVINGS
JOINING AGE 50	£43.94	£51.89	£95.40
RENEWAL AGE
55	£37.47	£46.35	£154.56
60	£45.07	£58.52	£281.52
65	£76.14	£132.71	£592.24
70	£96.37	£179.72	£1088.28
75	£117.28	£248.14	£1578.32

Figures for joining age 50 are current rates. All other ages are based on current rates and assume a 4% annual subscription increase every year for both plans.

If you are under 60 years of age please telephone 01392 477210, fax 01392 477235 or complete this coupon for details.

Mr/Ms/Ms _____
Address _____
Postcode _____
Tel _____
Current insurer _____
Renewal date _____

50 EXETER
PLAN FRIENDLY SOCIETY

BELCH HILL HOUSE, WALNUT GARDENS, EXETER EX4 4JX.

THE TIMES MONEY INFORMATION SERVICE

Never too young to learn about cash

Children could benefit from a new book designed to help them to understand how to manage money. Published by Bloomsbury Children's Books, Are Your Kids Cash Wise? looks at potential money-spinners from cooking to craftwork, dog walking to paper rounds and gives children ideas on quick, safe and effective ways to generate cash. The book also includes sections on fundraising and how to save and invest money. Available from bookshops priced £3.99.

■ FROM Tuesday Abbey National will be increasing interest rates on its portfolio of savings accounts by up to 0.25 per cent. New rates on the investor 30 account are now 3.60 per cent on balances of £1,000-plus, 3.85 per cent on £2,000-plus, 5.1 per cent on £5,000-plus and 5.5 per cent on £10,000-plus. For details of new rates on other accounts, contact your local branch.

■ LLOYDS BANK has increased its savings rates with immediate effect. The rate on its Instant Gold Savings Account has risen by 0.25 per cent to 4.50 per cent on the minimum balance of £2,500. Rates are tied up to 5.30 per cent on balances of more than £50,000. Other new rates include a rise of 0.30 per cent on the Investment Account and an increase of 0.25 per cent on the 30 Day Savings Account. The interest rate on the Lloyds Bank Tessa is now 6.85 per cent.

■ THE Microplan Guide to Offshore Investment Funds 1997-98 is now available. The 500-page guide is packed with performance statistics, fund facts and analysis of more than 5,500 offshore funds to March 31, 1997. It includes an in-depth review with charts of 350 of the top performers in the fund of funds category.

■ HALIFAX is offering a free video, entitled Buying a Used Car with Confidence, as part of its car loans package. Halifax unsecured personal loans (£500 to £10,000) are available only to existing Halifax customers. To be eligible for a copy of the video, customers must successfully apply for a Halifax personal loan to purchase a car between August 30, 1997. Call Halifax Direct on 0800 184184 or ask at your local branch.

■ FROM Tuesday Abbey National will be increasing interest rates on its portfolio of savings accounts by up to 0.25 per cent. New rates on the investor 30 account are now 3.60 per cent on balances of £1,000-plus, 3.85 per cent on £2,000-plus, 5.1 per cent on £5,000-plus and 5.5 per cent on £10,000-plus. For details of new rates on other accounts, contact your local branch.

■ LLOYDS BANK has increased its savings rates with immediate effect. The rate on its Instant Gold Savings Account has risen by 0.25 per cent to 4.50 per cent on the minimum balance of £2,500. Rates are tied up to 5.30 per cent on balances of more than £50,000. Other new rates include a rise of 0.30 per cent on the Investment Account and an increase of 0.25 per cent on the 30 Day Savings Account. The interest rate on the Lloyds Bank Tessa is now 6.85 per cent.

■ THE Microplan Guide to Offshore Investment Funds 1997-98 is now available. The 500-page guide is packed with performance statistics, fund facts and analysis of more than 5,500 offshore funds to March 31, 1997. It includes an in-depth review with charts of 350 of the top performers in the fund of funds category.

■ HALIFAX is offering a free video, entitled Buying a Used Car with Confidence, as part of its car loans package. Halifax unsecured personal

SAVERS' BEST BUYS

INSTANT ACCESS ACCOUNTS

Account	Notice of term	Deposit	Rate	Interest paid
Sainsbury's Bank 0500 405060	Instant	£1	6.15	Y/y
Cheltenham & Gloucester 0400 742437	Instant	£1,000	6.50	Y/y
Legal & General Bank 0500 111200	Direct Access	£2,500	6.70	Y/y
Legal & General Bank 0500 111200	Direct Access	£10,000	7.00	Y/y

NOTICE ACCOUNTS & BONDS

Account	Notice of term	Deposit	Rate	Interest paid
Nottingham BS 0115 956422	30 day p	£5,000	8.95	Y/y
Nottingham BS 0115 956422	30 day p	£10,000	7.05	Y/y
Scarborough BS 01723 500816	120 day	£5,000	7.15	Y/y
Coverity BS 0345 685522	Fixed Inc Bnd 2	£1,000	7.80	F/y

FIRST TESSAS (TAX FREE)

Sun Banking Corp 01438 744505
Investec Bank (UK) 0171 203 1650
Principality BS 01222 344188
Universal BS 0800 281498

CREDIT CARDS BEST BUYS

CREDIT CARDS

Card type	Interest per month	APR%	Fee per annum
Capital One Bank 0800 669000	0.64%N	7.90%N	Nil
RBS Advanta 0800 777770	0.79%N	9.90%N	Nil
Co-operative Bank 0800 109000	0.87%C	10.90%	Nil

PERSONAL LOANS BEST BUYS

PERSONAL LOANS

APR	Monthly payment on £25,000 for 3yrs no insurance
Northern Bank BS 0345 421421	12.90%N
Direct Line 0181 680 9988	13.90%N
RBS Direct 0800 121125	14.00%

No. A = Minimum age 22 years. Holders of comprehensive motor insurance policy or lender's existing customers. B = Withdrawals via Bank Clearing System. C = no interest free period. F = Fixed Rate (all other rates variable). H = Higher rate applies if insurance not arranged. N = introductory rate for a limited period. P = By Post only.

* RATES SHOWN ARE GROSS AND SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE

PLEASE CHECK RATES BEFORE INVESTING

Source: MoneyFacts, The Monthly Guide to Investment & Mortgage Rates (01882 500 677)

PIBS

FIXED RATE

Gross coupon	Gross yield	Minimum issue purchase
Birmingham Midshires 9.375%	118.19	7,500
Bradford & Bingley 11.625%	141.77	8,200
Bradford & Bingley 13.000%	158.45	8,200
Bradford & Bingley 13.375%	168.00	8,200
Britannia 13.000%	157.96	8,244
Coventry 12.125%	151.23	8,982
First National 11.750%	142.28	8,280
Leeds & Holbeck 13.375%	167.79	8,168
Newcastle 12.625%	154.65	8,164
Northern Rock 12.625%	154.65	8,164
Skipton 12.875%	156.75	8,214

FLOATING RATE

Gross coupon	Gross yield	Minimum issue purchase
Cheshire (30/06/27/03) 9.04063%	114.00	100.00
First Nat (22/08/20/03) 9.12031%	104.00	100.00

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

PIBS = Permanent Interest-Bearing Shares

Source: ABI AMRO Home Growth - 0171 601 0101

Shares enjoy strong finish

TRADING PERIOD: Settlement takes place five business days after the day of trade. Changes are calculated on the previous day's close, but adjustments are made when a stock is ex-dividend. Changes, yields and price/earnings ratios are based on middle prices.

1997	High	Low	Company	Price	Change	%	1997	High	Low	Company	Price	Change	%
ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
BANKS
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
BREWERIES, PUBS & REST
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
DIVERSIFIED INDUSTRIALS
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
ELECTRICITY
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
ELECTRONIC & ELECT
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
ENGINEERING
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
ENGINEERING, VEHICLES
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
FOOD MANUFACTURERS
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
HEALTHCARE
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
HOUSEHOLD GOODS
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
INSURANCE
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
INVESTMENT TRUSTS
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
MEDIA
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
MID-CAP (under 5 years)
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
LONGS (over 15 years)
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
UNLISTED
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
INDEX-LINKED (on projected inflation of 10%)
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
RETAILERS, FOOD
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
RETAILERS, GENERAL
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
WATER
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100
ALTERNATIVE INV MARKET
1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100	1100

MILLWOOD DESIGNER HOMES
REPORT AND ACCOUNTS NOW AVAILABLE.
TEL: 01732 770991

DEVELOPMENT FINANCE LIMITED

100% FINANCING AVAILABLE

FOR ALL YOUR FINANCIAL NEEDS

CONTACT US TODAY

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

01732 770991

Bank has change of heart over tenancy refusal

Will avail

20 40E

Shares enjoy strong finish

TRADING PERIOD: Settlement takes place five business days after the day of trade. Changes are calculated on the previous day's close, but adjustments are made when a stock is ex-dividend. Changes, yields and price/earnings ratios are based on middle prices.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

BANKS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

BREWERIES, PUBS & REST

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

BUILDING & CONSTRUCT

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

BUILDING MATERIALS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

CHEMICALS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

DISTRIBUTORS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

High Low Company Price % Chg P/E

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

DIVERSIFIED INDUSTRIALS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

ELECTRICITY

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

ELECTRONIC & ELECT

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

ENGINEERING

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

HOUSEHOLD GOODS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

INSURANCE

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

INVESTMENT TRUSTS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

High Low Company Price % Chg P/E

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

ENGINEERING, VEHICLES

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

FOOD MANUFACTURERS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

HEALTHCARE

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

LEISURE & HOTELS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Mining

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Oil & Gas

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Other Financial

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

High Low Company Price % Chg P/E

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Pharmaceuticals

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Printing & Paper

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Property

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Telecommunications

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Textiles & Apparel

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Transport

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Retailers, Food

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

High Low Company Price % Chg P/E

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Retailers, General

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Water

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Alternative Inv Market

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

High Low Company Price % Chg P/E

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Support Services

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

WINNING RESULTS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

BRITISH FUNDS

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

SHORTS (under 5 years)

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

LONGS (over 15 years)

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

UNLISTED

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

INDEX-UNITED on projected inflation of

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

High Low Company Price % Chg P/E

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

RETAILERS, FOOD

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

RETAILERS, GENERAL

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

WATER

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

ALTERNATIVE INV MARKET

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Source: FT Information

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Price at completion of 1st dividend

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

Price at completion of 1st dividend

High	Low	Company	Price	% Chg	P/E
100	95	100	100	0	100
100	95	100	100	0	100

British Grand Prix means something special to relaxed Scotsman

Coulthard stops to sign autographs for some of his many admirers yesterday, on arriving for practice for the British Grand Prix, at Silverstone tomorrow

Coulthard feels he's coming home

Michael Calvin on the weight of expectation surrounding the McLaren driver as he reaches a landmark at Silverstone

It was a slice of rural England, stolen from a chocolate box. A craftsman was renewing the thatched roof of an Elizabethan cottage, set deep in the Oxfordshire countryside. Sunlight stole between mature trees and the air was alive with birdsong. Then, along jogged David Coulthard.

"Good luck for Sunday," the craftsman cried. "Wazzat?" his labourer, who was at the bottom of the ladder, out of sight, asked. "It's that racing driver," came the reply. Coulthard shrugged, waved and sprinted up the hill. Expectation is everywhere.

Tomorrow, at Silverstone, he reaches the landmark of his fifth grand prix. As the principal British hope in his home race, he must be an attraction to all men, and women. Emotion is his enemy, clarity of thought his priority. As he retreats to his country hotel each night, and orders room service, the anticipation that he arouses closes in.

On the drive into Silverstone, Coulthard pulled up at traffic lights on a roundabout over the M40. Four men, towing a caravan in a family saloon, which waited alongside the Scot's top-of-the-range Mercedes, were instantly transformed into schoolboys.

They hung out of the car, waving blue baseball caps that pledged allegiance to Damon Hill. Coulthard laughed, lowered his electric window, and shouted: "You're supporting the wrong bloke. You've got no chance, so don't put any money on him."

At the circuit, a marshal implored him to autograph a photograph for his wife. "How long have you been married?" Coulthard asked. "Too long." It was a typical snatch of small talk, a brief respite from signing silk flags, scraps of paper and lucky racing shoes.

"I liken this to coming home, after you've been travelling for a long time," Coulthard reflected. "You arrive through your front door, and there is an immediate feeling of familiarity. You dump your bags, kick your shoes off, and put the kettle on."

There is a special sense of tradition, a real feeling of belonging. I know the marshals, the guys on the gate and the girls in the canteen. I love driving past the sign which says "Welcome to Silverstone, Home of British Motorsport". It's all good stick-your-chest-out stuff.

The faces, pressed against the wire fence that separates the paddock glitterati from the public are wistful. They scream the names of passing drivers with a haunting intensity. Coulthard is aware of accusations that the sport is growing away from its audience, but each second of a grand prix weekend is accounted for.

Typically, he barely had time to complete a debriefing session with his engineers after yesterday's free practice session, when a spin left him thirteenth, behind his McLaren team-mate, Mika Hakkinen. A helicopter was waiting to whisk him to a function at Eton College, and on to a subsequent sponsors' cocktail party.

Coulthard said: "You look at the people behind that wire fence and feel amazingly guilty. Effectively, they are the ones who are paying for you to go racing. In a way, given that what you can't see can't bother you, it would almost be better if we had a brick wall, instead of that wire fence."

"I'm not a petrolhead. I'm not car crazy. But I can understand why they do what they do. I remember my first time there, as a spectator. The Ferrari was the first car on the circuit. It was a misty morning and you could hear the noise in the distance before you could see the car. It had something about it."

"It flashed by. When it was gone I just said: 'Wow, that was great.' What is great about that? It was just a car painted red making a loud noise. But, to be there, to smell it as it went by, was worth the hundred-odd quid it cost me."

A racing driver is expected to embody self-reliance. The best instinctively compartmentalise their lives. But, at Silverstone, Coulthard is perpetually ambushed by the humanity which underpins technology. Even in the cockpit, travelling at 150mph, he cannot escape his public.

"You are more aware of the crowd at Silverstone than anywhere else," he said. "It's a sea of people. Not an indistinct crowd, but individual groups, because your eyes are taking in bite-sized chunks of information. On top of that, you have to absorb the noise."

"I can remember driving inside Alesis into Stowe (corner) in 1995. I could actually hear the crowd going 'Aah' above the noise of me changing down. It was the most bizarre thing. Until I realised what the commotion was, I almost stopped driving. It was as if, suddenly, I had become detached from the car."

Self-control, however, is an essential self-defence mechanism. Despite the provocation of misfortune, most acute when clutch failure robbed him of victory in Montreal last month, Coulthard has forced himself to become a student of human nature. It is a timeless lesson, that gains in importance as a race day unfolds.

"Formula One is the big time, but I've been racing for 15 years," he said. "Throughout that time, I've always tried to hide and control my emotions. If I'm up someone's exhaust pipe, and can see him shaking his head, it tells me he's frustrated. He's mine, because I feel I can force him into a mistake."

"I was disappointed with myself in Canada. I lost the plot completely. I punched the steering wheel, and did all sorts of things I hope never to do again. The emotions might have been natural, but I gave off the wrong signals. Racing is as much in the mind as it is in the physical act of controlling a car."

"That is why I read body language at the drivers' briefing. Who is yawning? Who is relaxed? Who is uptight? I can go into the race with a game-plan. The way a person drives reflects his character — have you ever seen someone who is crazy drive as smooth as silk?"

There are so many things to consider. You change your plan as you go around — when you are braking late, getting the power on early, monitoring the fuel load and checking that your tyres aren't blistered. In the end, we all have to get the job done."

Alien activity to be viewed from another world

LYNNE TRUSS

Kicking and Screaming

The excellent thing about motor racing is that it gives the lie to all that Chariots of the Gods nonsense. When people wag their fingers and say: "But why did ancient civilisations make patterns on the ground that could be seen only from outer space?" you can kick a stone and refute them thus: "Ah, but look at the grand prix — that's the same." Which ought to shut them up very nicely.

Because it's true what they say. You stand at a point on the Silverstone track, your face contorted against the grit and noise, and cars hurtle past in an eat-my-dust fashion, too fast for you to check which ones they are. What use is a ground-level perspective on this? None at all. But Martians point a skinny finger at a grand prix and say: "Hey, that's interesting, the red one's been round more times than all the others."

Whether the practice laps yesterday were much use to the drivers, I do not know, but they certainly helped this novice, overheated spectator to realise what she was up against. "What on earth — nyow, nyow — is going on here?" I asked myself. To which the only reply was — nyow — "Pardon?"

Juggling binoculars, crib-sheet and sandwich, I stood out on a small, turfed mound near the Brooklands corner. This delightful spot, behind the ubiquitous link-fencing, had been found after a lengthy walk through motor-home car parks, along potholed Tarmac and across random patches of scrubby grass. First tip to grand prix visitors: don't wear open-toed sandals.

Silverstone is, basically, a bleak, flat aerodrome, and the best way to traverse it is by jeep, not foot. As I trudged my way into unmetre roped-off dead ends, I became so foot-weary and so envious of anybody on wheeled transport that I considered mugging small children for their bikes.

Possibly, this enforced pedestrianism is all part of a cunning ruse to make the fast car look more attractive (like the traffic jam on the A45, which was so slow it allowed me to complete The Times Two crossword while at the wheel of a moving vehicle). But, in fact, it just makes the fast car look even more irritating, because you're hot and worn out.

Only a flea circus is more suspect than Formula One as a spectator sport. Did you see that? No, what? Hang on, it's gone again. And who cares?

So I'm proud to say that, by the end of my first lengthy spectator stint, I had learnt to recognise Damon Hill's blue-and-white Danko job — nyow — also Jacques Villeneuve and Johnny Herbert — nyow, nyow. This self-taught expertise bears witness to considerable levels of concentration.

The trouble with recognising cars travelling at big speeds is that, when you look up again from your crib-sheet to double-check (yes, No 16), they've gone. The saving grace, of course, is that they come back round again in a minute and a half.

I have to admit that the nearest thing I had come to motor racing was bewildered possession of a Scalextric set, which I remember mainly for introducing me to the notion of not crying brattishly when the Christmas present turns out not to be a pony. This Scalextric made a big impact in other ways, however: I learnt the peculiar haddock-bottom smell of faulty wiring and the dire consequences of a transformer burning a hole in a carpet.

In several ways, too, Scalextric stood me in good stead for Silverstone, that aimless way a disappointed child bolts the track-bits together — clack! clack! — to make a subtly different shape to a circular track; that annoying din; that mind-numbing lack of variation, as the cars go round and round and occasionally fall off with the wheels spinning; and that frustrating way that the red car always finishes first.

Despite my Scalextric expertise, the vocabulary takes some getting used to. I keep asking: "And who does Johnny Herbert play for, I mean drive for?" which gives the game away at once.

In motor racing, it turns out that a "team" is two drivers, and not six or seven, as I always imagined. And I heard yesterday that many of the drivers will be concerned with "saving their rubber" this weekend — a useful and graphic phrase that has inexplicably not been adopted in the wider world of metaphor. I've heard of people keeping their powder dry, and sparing their horses. But, from now on, I shall save my rubber, and see if anyone notices.

And what of the drivers, those gods among men? Because the media centre is situated within the famous paddock, one bumps into snake-haired men in padded racing-suits who are presumably the stars of the show. But, though I saw someone called Mika Hakkinen signing autographs for some frantic fans perched up behind a wire fence (I asked who he was), I have to say that he looked rather ordinary to me.

No special physical type is suited to driving a car. I suppose — not bulging thighs, not being taller or fitter than other people. All their famous magnetism must come from the danger of their job, which is why they are worshipped like Spitfire pilots.

There is a real race tomorrow, at which point the sport may begin to make sense. The striving, the gear changes, the pitstops, the nyow-nyow. I'd still rather see it from a flying saucer.

DETAILS FROM SILVERSTONE

PRACTICE TIMES: 1. M. Hakkinen (Fin, McLaren-Mercedes) 1m 25.55sec; 2. J. Villeneuve (Can, Williams-Renault) 1:22.28sec; 3. M. Schumacher (Ger, Ferrari) 1:23.27; 4. J. Herbert (GB, Sauber-Petronas) 1:23.58; 5. J. Alesi (Fr, Benetton-Renault) 1:23.78; 6. G. Fisichella (It, Jordan-Peugeot) 1:23.88; 7. M. Salvo (Mex, Tyrrell-Ford) 1:24.12; 8. A. Wurz (Austria, Benetton-Renault) 1:24.23; 9. E. Irvine (GB, Ferrari) 1:24.42; 10. J. Trulli (It, Prost-Mugen-Honda) 1:24.84; 11. R. Schumacher (Ger, Jordan-Peugeot) 1:24.92; 12. D. Coulthard (GB, McLaren-Mercedes) 1:25.30; 13. M. Salvo (Mex, Tyrrell-Ford) 1:25.35; 14. S. Nakano (Japan, Prost-Mugen-Honda) 1:25.27; 15. U.

Katayama (Japan, Minardi-Hart) 1:26.44; 17. N. Fortuna (Arg, Sauber-Petronas) 1:26.54; 18. P. Barrichello (Br, Stewart-Ford) 1:26.75; 19. P. Dini (Br, Arrows-Yamaha) 1:26.79; 20. D. Hill (GB, Arrows-Yamaha) 1:26.81; 21. I. Marques (Br, Minardi-Hart) 1:27.02; 22. J. Verstappen (Hol, Tyrrell-Ford) 1:27.93; CHAMPIONSHIP POSITIONS (after eight races): Drivers: 1. M. Schumacher 47pts; 2. Villeneuve 33; 3. F. Monty 19; 4. Irvine 18; 5. equal, D. Padoa (Fr, Prost-Mugen-Honda) and Alesi 16; 7. Coulthard 11; 8. equal, G. Berger (Austria, Benetton-Renault) and Hakkinen 10; 10. Fisichella 8; 11. Herbert 7; 12. Barrichello 6; 13. R. Schumacher 5; 14. Salvo 2; 15. equal, N. Luzzi (It, Sauber-Petronas) and Nakano 1.

Constructors: 1. Ferrari 66pts; 2. Williams-Renault 52; 3. Benetton-Renault 29; 4. McLaren-Mercedes 21; 5. Prost-Mugen-Honda 18; 6. Jordan-Peugeot 13; 7. Sauber-Petronas 8; 8. Stewart-Ford 6; 9. Tyrrell-Ford 2; GRAND PRIX TO COME: Tomorrow (Silverstone), July 27; Germany (Hockenheim) Aug 10; Hungary (Hungaroring) Aug 24; Belgium (Spa-Francorchamps) Sept 7; Italian (Monza) Sept 21; Austrian (A1-Ring) Sept 28; Luxembourg (Nurburgring) Oct 12; Japanese (Suzuka) Oct 26; European (Jarama); TELEVISION: ITV, Today: 12.30-2.15pm (qualifying, free), 5.30-5.50 (previews), Tomorrow: 1.04-1.50pm (qual), 11.00pm-12.15pm (highlights).

Runner whose mythical feats were reserved for metric mile

TO REWRITE history is one thing; to rewrite mythology quite another. The world of sport will be shattered to hear a claim that Roger Bannister was not, in fact, the first man to run a mile in less than four minutes. That honour, he alleges, should go to Jack Lovelock, of New Zealand, who did it not once but twice and as far back as 1935.

This startling claim comes in a forthcoming book by a chap called Chris Harte, an historian of Australian cricket. The book is the brilliantly titled A Sportsman's Year (clearly a tribute to the book of the same title published in 1989 and written by a chap called Barnes), and is to be published by London Sports Reporting Agency.

Harte claims that Lovelock managed the phenomenal time of 3min 52sec, but kept it dark. He did not want to forewarn opponents for the Olympic Games. Harte duly collected his gold in Berlin in the 1,500 metres. Thus he made sporting history, missing out on mythology.

Congratulations to Tina and Jouni Jusila, who between them won the traditional Finnish event, the wife-carrying world championship, which was held in Sonkajärvi, in northern Finland, last weekend. Jouni carried his tow-headed lady around a 236-metre obstacle course to claim a world record. Is this a sporting re-enactment of the Viking pursuits of rape and pillage?

Singling out

More on the A team, the continuing crises of football clubs whose names commence with this most unfortunate of letters. Louis Burgess, old friend of this column, writes to tell me of an oversight in previous correspondence on this most fascinating of subjects, he forgot about Altrincham. In 1980, the club was denied membership of the Football League by a single vote — because two of its promised supporters within the League

SIMON BARNES

On Saturday

were unable to register their votes.

The Grimsby Town representative was inadvertently sitting in the wrong part of the hall to vote, while the Luton Town man got the time of the meeting wrong and arrived a few minutes after the vote. Altrincham would probably be in the League to this day, had events fallen otherwise. What is more, this was the first year a single non-League club had stood for election against four candidates for re-election.

Had Altrincham been elected and done well, which was likely, it is speculated that they would have changed the traditional notion of the League as a closed shop. Other members of the ill-fated A teams are Aberdeen, Accrington Stanley, Ashington, Aldershot and Argonauts.

Show piece

Every now and then a humble sporting spectator rises up to claim his 15 minutes-worth and so this column sends its best congratulations to Mitchell Libonati. 27. He made it as guest on the David Letterman Show — because, he claims, he found a piece of Evander Holyfield's car. No doubt there will soon be as many pieces of the aforementioned organ as there are fragments of the True Cross.

Fashion note, or as the Silver Surfer of Marvel Comics used to say: "What new and dreadful madness is this?" Newcastle United announces a new away strip. "The mainly navy-coloured away shirt incorporates double vertical panels in fashionable (what?) orange and forest green with an offset Newcastle Brown Ale sponsor's logo. The shirt is complimented [sic] by a traditional ribbed crew neck and cuffs... the technical fitting [eh?] goalkeeper shirt incorporates orange colouring with psychedelic print offset." The away shirt is a snip for 1p less than forty quid. Away the suckers!

Birdies galore

Golf courses have been called "the airport lounges of landscape gardening". Their unnatural vivid green, their herbicides and their fungicides make them about as natural as an electricity pylon. But, increasingly, golfing people, sensitive to such criticism (and also perhaps sensitive to the pleasures of a more natural environment), have sought to improve matters.

To celebrate this, 12 golf courses on each side of the Atlantic took part in a Europe v United States Ryder Cup competitive bird race: who could see most birds on their golf course? This was organised by David Stubbs, executive director of the European Golf Association Ecology Unit.

Europe scored 217 birds in the 24 hours of the race; the US managed 237 but, under a prearranged handicapping system, finished second. Valderrama, in Spain, managed 48 species and a club near Pamplona managed the spectacular count of 15 birds of prey. True, many of the species recorded do not reflect the conditions of the golf course: the birds were overlying on migration. But it is all splendid stuff, so best greetings from this column to all concerned.

If you're looking for a great spread of bets on Formula One you'll find us in pole position

It's a racing certainty that few can match the spread of bets we're offering on the Grand Prix season.

You can bet on who'll be the next world champion, who will win each Grand Prix, or even how many points Damon Hill will score overall.

You can make a bet that will keep your excitement going all season.

To find out more, please call David Harvey on 0171 528 9887 or fill in the coupon. Spread betting is a great formula for betting on Formula One.

To: City Index Ltd., Cardinal Court, 23 Thomas More Street, London E1 9YY. T11777

Please send me information about Spread Betting ☐ Please call me about your services ☐

Name Address

Postcode

Tel: Day Evening

For a Great Spread of Bets

NB: Spread bets carry a high level of risk to your capital. Only speculate with money you can afford to lose. Spread betting may not be suitable for all investors; therefore ensure that you fully understand the risks involved and seek advice if necessary.

Parts of this car travel at the speed of light.

ALCATEL, THE "HI-SPEED COMPANY,"
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATION SYSTEMS PARTNER OF PROST

Alcatel equips the Prost Grand Prix team with customised communication systems that – for example – keep drivers and crew in touch, at the speed of light. As a world leader in communication systems, Alcatel is present in over 135 countries. At Silverstone this weekend, every member of Alcatel's 3000 UK staff will be behind the Prost team. All the way.

BOXING

Joking falls flat as Akinwande plots champion's downfall

FROM SRIKUMAR SEN, BOXING CORRESPONDENT, IN LAKE TAHOE

A FEW years ago, a bout between Lennox Lewis and Henry Akinwande would have been considered a mismatch. Indeed, after Akinwande's first contest with Axel Schulz, which was a boring draw, a sharp-witted colleague asked Mickey Duff, who was then Akinwande's manager: "You said that if Akinwande won this fight he would meet Lewis. Did you mean Jerry Lewis?"

That was five years ago. Since then Akinwande has won 17 contests and today the oft 7in Dulwich heavyweight will be facing Lennox Lewis, the World Boxing Council champion, here. The joke is now as flat as those opponents Akinwande has knocked out. The challenger is a greatly improved boxer who poses a distinct threat to Lewis.

Whatever the outcome, it is a pairing that will be welcomed by boxing, which is still reeling from the blow dealt by Mike Tyson in Las Vegas two weeks ago. It is marvellous to think that two Londoners will help to give boxing back some credibility.

Lewis and Akinwande are quiet, retiring types who have refused to engage in stalling matches. When Akinwande was asked by an American reporter if he had any hatred for Lewis, he replied: "No. I only wish him luck."

Akinwande has developed, in the hands of Don Turner, Evander Holyfield's trainer, into a world-class heavyweight. He has an excellent jab and a knockout punch in his right hand. Lewis is a far superior boxer and more experienced but Akinwande's height and awkward style could just embarrass the champion.

Akinwande is favoured by American boxing writers because his victory over Schulz in the second match looked a good result as, subsequently, the German did enough to beat George Foreman but did not get the verdict. Also, the Americans feel that Lewis has looked too apprehensive after his second-round knockout by Oliver McCull three years ago.

Turner said that he expects his man to win because he has fast hands. "All Akinwande has to do is nullify Lewis's right hand and hit him on the chin," he said. "Akinwande throws more punches than any other heavyweight. The other day he was up to 65 punches per round. If he throws the combination that knocked out Jeremy Williams [for the WBO title] forget about Lewis: he will fall, too."

However, there are some question marks over Akinwande. There are doubts whether he can take a punch. None of his 31 opponents has been able to land a clean blow on his chin to show us if he can take it. Also, Akinwande's performance against Scott Welch, who is the worst challenger for the heavy-weight title the world has ever seen, causes some concern. Why was he not able to stop such an incompetent challenger? And when Welch made his only serious attempt to hit Akinwande on the chin, the Briton fell back in confusion.

Emanuel Steward, Lewis's trainer, is happy that the Americans favour Akinwande. He said that when Lewis knocks him out they might begin to realise that he is indeed a force to be reckoned with. Steward has, for the last seven weeks, been at Big Bear Lake, California, where Lewis has been training, trying to convince his man that he need not fear Akinwande's power. He has told Lewis that having stood up to blows from Ray Mercer and fought him toe to toe, he has little to fear.

Steward said yesterday that in the last two days he had managed to get Lewis into the kind of aggressive mood needed to beat Akinwande. He said that Lewis would be wearing white trunks and white boots, which would influence the champion to get up on his toes and look lively. The trainer has a theory that black, being a puncher's colour, slows you down. White makes you faster.

"When a fighter has light trunks he feels lighter and flashier. Just like when I put on a tuxedo, I feel conservative. When I put on white shoes and a yellow tie I am ready to go out there and play," he said.

If Steward is right and Lewis does take the initiative, Akinwande could find his combinations too much. Even though Akinwande is awkward and difficult to hit, it needs just one good punch from Lewis to break down his defences and finish him off.

I expect the contest to go in Akinwande's favour for a few rounds until Lewis has found a way round the long, stiff jab. Once inside, Lewis could finish the contest quickly, perhaps in the fifth or sixth round.

Lewis: in aggressive mood

King promises to stand by his man

DON KING, the boxing promoter, said yesterday that he would stand by Mike Tyson after the heavyweight championship bout two weeks ago in which Tyson bit Evander Holyfield's ears. "I am not making excuses for Mike, but I know him and I know that he's a good human being," King said, breaking his silence on the controversy. "He's my friend and I stand with him. What happened was an aberration, a sad episode that all of us wish could have been avoided."

Akinwande: a distinct threat

The Tour passes through tranquil fields of sunflowers yesterday before emotions started to get out of hand towards the finish

Tranquillity descends into violence

FROM JEREMY WHITTLE IN MARENNES

THE Tour de France was plunged into controversy yesterday evening when Tom Steels, the Belgian national champion and winner this year of four stages in the Paris-Nice race, was disqualified after a dangerous and ill-tempered sprint finish among the salt flats of Marennes on the French Atlantic coast.

Worse, though, followed soon after at a brief press conference when the race jury announced that Djamilidine Abdoujaparov, 33, from Uzbekistan, a past winner of ten stages of the Tour, had failed a doping control after the finish of the second stage at Vire on Monday. As a result, Abdoujaparov, the first rider to post a positive dope test in the Tour in almost a decade, was also ejected from the race.

Steels and Erik Zabel, of Germany, the stage winner, were each fined $Fr200 (about £80) and relegated to last place on the stage for irregular and dangerous sprinting. But Steels's conduct in the final 200 metres was also considered dangerous, ending his Tour for this year.

Steels violently hurled a full plastic bottle from his bike at Frederic Moncassin, of France, after apparently being elbowed as he challenged for victory, but was deeply repentant later, saying: "What I did wasn't good for me and wasn't good for cycling, but you have to understand that everything happens in sprints in the heat of the moment. Things happen in the final half-hour in a stage of the Tour de France that you wouldn't believe. People lose sight of what's important and fail to respect each other."

Just ahead of that feud, Zabel had swept dangerously across the finishing straight to beat in Jeroen Blijlevens, from Holland, and Robbie McEwan, from Australia, against the crowd barriers.

"I got worked over by Zabel about 200 metres from the line," McEwan said. "I was on his wheel and he just took us all right across the road to the barriers. It virtually brought me to a standstill."

With Steels and Moncassin out of the picture, and Mario Cipollini, the specialist sprinter from Italy, struggling to recapture his form after falling heavily early in the day, Zabel pulled clear by some distance alongside the barriers to cross the line first for what seemed to be the sixth Tour victory of his short professional career.

Zabel: disqualified victor

"There was nothing irregular about the sprint," Zabel said after stepping down from the winner's podium. "I had a little contact with Cipollini, but nothing more than usual."

However, although no rider lodged an official protest, the race judges opted to re-examine the videotape and awarded victory to Blijlevens. "We did not protest," Blijlevens, 25, said. "It was the jury that decided to change the result. It is not the way I like to win, but the jury made a decision and it's fair play."

Although riders have been disqualified from the tour for illicit help in the mountains and for doping infractions in the past, disqualifications for dangerous and violent conduct are virtually unheard of. However, on a day when there were three significant crashes, perhaps it was inevitable that tempers would finally fray.

In sunshine and showers, the Tour headed west towards the Atlantic through the flatlands north of Bordeaux with large crowds lining the route to celebrate the success on Thursday of Cedric Vasseur, the first Frenchman to wear the leader's yellow jersey in this year's race. Vasseur, though, had to survive a nervous day of punctures, crashes and crosswinds.

John Lelangue, of the Société du Tour de France, said of the stage disqualifications: "This is very unusual. It is the first time we have disqualified a rider for something like this. Normally it is only for doping offences or for clinging on to team cars in the mountains; but this sort of behaviour is far too dangerous."

TOUR DE FRANCE DETAILS

SIXTH STAGE (La Roche to Marennes, 217 km): 1. J. Blijlevens (Bel), 2. E. Zabel (Ger), 3. M. Cipollini (It), 4. N. McEwan (Aus), 5. P. Moncassin (Fr), 6. T. Steels (Bel), 7. F. Moncassin (Fr), 8. M. Cipollini (It), 9. D. Niziol (Fr), 10. P. Brocard (Fr), 11. L. Gassiot (Fr), 12. M. Cipollini (It), 13. C. Moreau (Fr), 14. P. Charrier (Fr), 15. C. Moreau (Fr), 16. C. Moreau (Fr), 17. H. Vogels (Aus), 18. C. Moreau (Fr), 19. C. Moreau (Fr), 20. L. Gassiot (Fr), 21. M. Cipollini (It), 22. A. Auger (Fr), 23. M. Cipollini (It), 24. A. Auger (Fr), 25. M. Cipollini (It), 26. A. Auger (Fr), 27. C. Moreau (Fr), 28. A. Auger (Fr), 29. M. Cipollini (It), 30. A. Auger (Fr), 31. M. Cipollini (It), 32. A. Auger (Fr), 33. M. Cipollini (It), 34. A. Auger (Fr), 35. M. Cipollini (It), 36. A. Auger (Fr), 37. M. Cipollini (It), 38. A. Auger (Fr), 39. M. Cipollini (It), 40. A. Auger (Fr), 41. M. Cipollini (It), 42. A. Auger (Fr), 43. M. Cipollini (It), 44. A. Auger (Fr), 45. M. Cipollini (It), 46. A. Auger (Fr), 47. M. Cipollini (It), 48. A. Auger (Fr), 49. M. Cipollini (It), 50. A. Auger (Fr), 51. M. Cipollini (It), 52. A. Auger (Fr), 53. M. Cipollini (It), 54. A. Auger (Fr), 55. M. Cipollini (It), 56. A. Auger (Fr), 57. M. Cipollini (It), 58. A. Auger (Fr), 59. M. Cipollini (It), 60. A. Auger (Fr), 61. M. Cipollini (It), 62. A. Auger (Fr), 63. M. Cipollini (It), 64. A. Auger (Fr), 65. M. Cipollini (It), 66. A. Auger (Fr), 67. M. Cipollini (It), 68. A. Auger (Fr), 69. M. Cipollini (It), 70. A. Auger (Fr), 71. M. Cipollini (It), 72. A. Auger (Fr), 73. M. Cipollini (It), 74. A. Auger (Fr), 75. M. Cipollini (It), 76. A. Auger (Fr), 77. M. Cipollini (It), 78. A. Auger (Fr), 79. M. Cipollini (It), 80. A. Auger (Fr), 81. M. Cipollini (It), 82. A. Auger (Fr), 83. M. Cipollini (It), 84. A. Auger (Fr), 85. M. Cipollini (It), 86. A. Auger (Fr), 87. M. Cipollini (It), 88. A. Auger (Fr), 89. M. Cipollini (It), 90. A. Auger (Fr), 91. M. Cipollini (It), 92. A. Auger (Fr), 93. M. Cipollini (It), 94. A. Auger (Fr), 95. M. Cipollini (It), 96. A. Auger (Fr), 97. M. Cipollini (It), 98. A. Auger (Fr), 99. M. Cipollini (It), 100. A. Auger (Fr).

LEADING OVERALL POSITIONS: 1. C. Vasseur (Fr), 2. E. Zabel (Ger), 3. M. Cipollini (It), 4. N. McEwan (Aus), 5. P. Moncassin (Fr), 6. T. Steels (Bel), 7. F. Moncassin (Fr), 8. M. Cipollini (It), 9. D. Niziol (Fr), 10. P. Brocard (Fr), 11. L. Gassiot (Fr), 12. M. Cipollini (It), 13. C. Moreau (Fr), 14. P. Charrier (Fr), 15. C. Moreau (Fr), 16. C. Moreau (Fr), 17. H. Vogels (Aus), 18. C. Moreau (Fr), 19. C. Moreau (Fr), 20. L. Gassiot (Fr), 21. M. Cipollini (It), 22. A. Auger (Fr), 23. M. Cipollini (It), 24. A. Auger (Fr), 25. M. Cipollini (It), 26. A. Auger (Fr), 27. C. Moreau (Fr), 28. A. Auger (Fr), 29. M. Cipollini (It), 30. A. Auger (Fr), 31. M. Cipollini (It), 32. A. Auger (Fr), 33. M. Cipollini (It), 34. A. Auger (Fr), 35. M. Cipollini (It), 36. A. Auger (Fr), 37. M. Cipollini (It), 38. A. Auger (Fr), 39. M. Cipollini (It), 40. A. Auger (Fr), 41. M. Cipollini (It), 42. A. Auger (Fr), 43. M. Cipollini (It), 44. A. Auger (Fr), 45. M. Cipollini (It), 46. A. Auger (Fr), 47. M. Cipollini (It), 48. A. Auger (Fr), 49. M. Cipollini (It), 50. A. Auger (Fr), 51. M. Cipollini (It), 52. A. Auger (Fr), 53. M. Cipollini (It), 54. A. Auger (Fr), 55. M. Cipollini (It), 56. A. Auger (Fr), 57. M. Cipollini (It), 58. A. Auger (Fr), 59. M. Cipollini (It), 60. A. Auger (Fr), 61. M. Cipollini (It), 62. A. Auger (Fr), 63. M. Cipollini (It), 64. A. Auger (Fr), 65. M. Cipollini (It), 66. A. Auger (Fr), 67. M. Cipollini (It), 68. A. Auger (Fr), 69. M. Cipollini (It), 70. A. Auger (Fr), 71. M. Cipollini (It), 72. A. Auger (Fr), 73. M. Cipollini (It), 74. A. Auger (Fr), 75. M. Cipollini (It), 76. A. Auger (Fr), 77. M. Cipollini (It), 78. A. Auger (Fr), 79. M. Cipollini (It), 80. A. Auger (Fr), 81. M. Cipollini (It), 82. A. Auger (Fr), 83. M. Cipollini (It), 84. A. Auger (Fr), 85. M. Cipollini (It), 86. A. Auger (Fr), 87. M. Cipollini (It), 88. A. Auger (Fr), 89. M. Cipollini (It), 90. A. Auger (Fr), 91. M. Cipollini (It), 92. A. Auger (Fr), 93. M. Cipollini (It), 94. A. Auger (Fr), 95. M. Cipollini (It), 96. A. Auger (Fr), 97. M. Cipollini (It), 98. A. Auger (Fr), 99. M. Cipollini (It), 100. A. Auger (Fr).

PEEPERS HERE

"A masterpiece" EDGE
 "Nothing short of brilliant" PC Format
 "A stunning achievement" PC Gamer

DUNGEON KEEPER The most eagerly anticipated computer game of the decade

Out now!

BULLDOG PRODUCTIONS LTD. PC CD

AN EXCLUSIVE READER OFFER THE TIMES

50% off adventure sports

The Times offers you a selection of adventure sports throughout Britain this summer with discounts of 50 per cent off normal prices. You can choose from more than 15 activities anytime before September 30, 1997, subject to availability. Collect four tokens, attach them to a voucher, and book your visit in advance with the relevant company. When you make your payment, send your voucher and tokens to validate your discount. Readers are responsible for taking out their own holiday and accident insurance cover.

FREE SCUBA DIVE

You can have a free try-dive with the British Sub-Aqua Club (normally £15) between Aug 11-17. Present four differently numbered tokens when you take your dive and call 0500 947 202 for your nearest teaching pool.

Sailing is one of those adventure sports that needs courage and determination, plus excellent instruction and safe conditions. Inland water sailing from Aztec and Aqua Sports offer beautiful surroundings and professional instructors. All you need to take is plimsolls, a towel - and a change of clothing. For open water sailing try our weekend offer from Hamble

Sailing with the chance to handle an ocean going yacht in open water conditions.

Simply collect four tokens and send them with the voucher to either: Hamble Sailing School, nr Southampton. Tel: 01703 452668. Offer: £75 weekend sailing, including tuition, food and accommodation on board (£150); Aztec Watersports, Evesham, Worcestershire. Tel: 01386 860013. Offer: £11 starter course (£22); £35; RYA Level 1, 2x4 sessions (£70); or Aquasport, Mersham, Surrey. Offer: £11 for 2-hr starter course; £35 for 2x4-hr sessions (£35).

ADVENTURE SPORTS VOUCHER

Send this form with the necessary number of differently numbered tokens to the address of the adventure sport you want to take up.

Mr/Mrs/Miss/Ms _____ Initial _____

Surname _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Day Tel _____

Evenings _____

If you would prefer not to receive information and offers from organisations carefully selected by The Times, please tick ☐

SEE MONDAY'S TIMES FOR 50% OFF ADVENTURE HOLIDAYS IN AMERICA

CHANGING TIMES

هنا امنه الاصل

Leg-break bowling could be the feature of play to turn events at Lord's today

Salisbury's chance to re-establish Test claim

Surrey hope that some of Warne's magic will rub off to leave opposition in a spin

The symmetry is appealing. Ian Salisbury and Alan Wells, who both left a disintegrating Sussex side last winter, one to further his ambitions at Surrey, the other snapped up by Kent after his ungracious dismissal as captain — sometimes friends and sometimes foes — come face to face on the big stage at Lord's today.

The big stage is an intriguing place for them to meet, for neither has stood there with comfort. Salisbury's leg spin has been a ready target for predatory batsmen during his staccato international career, and Wells's one Test appearance was a failure. Both were on the losing side in the epic NatWest Trophy final of 1993.

"I am looking forward to playing against him [Wells]," Salisbury said. "We have had our differences in the past. We are both strong-willed and stubborn, but respect each other's abilities."

"We fell out for a while over his book" — in it, Wells implied that Salisbury's feet left the ground after he played has come from an unlikely source in Terry Jenner, the former Australia leg spinner and Shane Warne's guru. At the instigation of David Gilbert, the Surrey coach, Jenner was flown to Cape Town to work with Salisbury during pre-season training and he has stayed in touch.

"Terry has been fantastic," Salisbury said. "I last saw him two weeks ago. He watched me bowl against Durham in the NatWest Trophy and we had a session in the nets the next day. He would not let me bowl a googly because he said I bowled too many. He also worked on my loop, which lets you get away with length a lot more." A few days later, Salisbury turned in match-winning figures of six for 19 against Nottinghamshire.

Salisbury was then coming back from an injury to his spinning finger that had spoilt his early weeks of the season. Going for a catch in the deep, he damaged ligaments and tendons in the finger, which is still swollen. "As Terry explained, your spinning finger is your lifeline," Salisbury said. "If something happens to it, you could be finished."

Naturally, Salisbury has not given up hope of playing for England again. At 27, he may be only four months younger than Warne, and boast only 18 Test wickets. Warne's 252, but hopes, reasonably enough, for another seven years at the top.

"I know what is needed to get back into the England frame," he said. "I must bowl not just well but consistently well. On my day, I can be as effective as Warne. When I get the chance to bowl last in a Test on a turning wicket and defending a big target, then you can judge me."

Free of injury, Salisbury will have never had it so good. He plays for a high-profile club and one that is prepared, since the signing of Saqlain Mushtaq, the Pakistan off spinner, to produce pitches that turn and bounce. "We are working well together," Salisbury said. "Saqlain keeps it tight and gives me a free rein to do what I like at the end."

On the eve of his second Lord's final, Salisbury remembers the disappointing moments of the first "Warwickshire played magnificently and for the next two years had a brilliant time, while for Sussex things went in the opposite direction," he said. "Whoever wins out of me and Wells today, at least one of us will have won one and lost one."

SIMON WILDE

Salisbury has a classic leg-spin action that is thriving at the Oval

Strang's aggression has been the key to his success as a bowler

Strang prepares to go on the attack

Kent look to Zimbabwe's finest to add to a reputation built on impressive performances against England last winter

After his success against England in the winter, Paul Strang was described by David Houghton, the Zimbabwe coach, as the fourth-best leg-spinner in the world. Considering that Shane Warne, Mushtaq Ahmed and Anil Kumble were the men Houghton ranked above him, that is not quite the pot-drawn it appears.

Certainly, few people queried the wisdom of Kent when they turned to Strang, 26, as their overseas replacement for Carl Hooper. Canterbury is a fitting venue for him to play his trade, a ground where Tich Freeman and Doug Wright, two of the greatest English leggies this century, are remembered fondly. Strang has not disappointed. As well as claiming 34 wickets so far this season, he has scored three half-centuries from the lower order as Kent press for their first county championship title since 1978.

That is for the longer term. At Lord's today, his personal duel with Surrey's assortment of stroke-makers will be the most compelling attraction of the Benson and Hedges Cup final and, possibly, the defining period of play. The exploits of Brown, Stewart and the Hollis brothers are well documented, yet Strang, in taking 12 wickets in the previous rounds, has quietly conceded an average of just 3.26 runs an over. Something has to give, and Strang is no shrinking violet.

"I could never be a bowler who just contains, whether it is one-day or four-day cricket," Strang said. "I always attack. Every over I try to get a wicket, but sometimes success comes through getting inside the heads of batsmen and just tormenting them."

Away from confrontation, this aggression is replaced by a more modest disposition and a willingness to learn. Warne, Mushtaq and Richie Benaud are among those whose brains have been picked as he seeks to add consistency and variety to his stock leg break.

He said: "In Zimbabwe, there are two first-class sides, Mashonaland and Matabeleland. So to come to England and play 17 four-day games within six months is a huge opportunity. Even if I just take 40 wickets and score 400 runs, it will have been worthwhile. People expect me to be a more dangerous bowler as the season wears on and the pitches become harder, but I hope they will remember that this is a long season for me and I will be very tired by the end."

His game was forged as his father traversed the country as an officer in the Rhodesian police force. Ron Strang, later to become a first-class umpire, taught him the rudiments of the game in gardens at the back of their various homes. Yet it was only when Peter Carlstein, a former South Africa Test player, paid a visit to Cecil John Rhodes school in Gweru that Strang, then aged ten, was introduced to the science of wrist spin.

At university in Cape Town, he came under the tutelage of Duncan Fletcher. Now coach at Glamorgan, Fletcher had enshrined himself in Zimbabwean folklore when he led his country to success against Australia in a World Cup game at Trent Bridge in 1983. He felt that Strang had the ability even in his late teens to embark on a career in South Africa. The prospect of appearing on the United Nations' blacklist discouraged such a course and Strang waited instead until 1993 before making his first-class debut in his native land.

By then, he was working in the marketing department of a timber firm, whose management was sympathetic to his cricket. Indeed, he did not leave Border Timbers until after the 1996 World Cup, three years after his Test debut against Sri Lanka.

He became contracted to the Zimbabwe board last August and rewarded the faith of his authority within two months by taking five wickets in an innings against Sri Lanka and completing a maiden Test century against Pakistan. Then came the series against England. He claimed ten wickets in the two drawn tests, including five for 123 in 59 overs in the first innings of the thrilling game in Bulawayo.

"To hold England was very, very significant," he said. "We knew we would get a lot of coverage, so it was a big chance for us to promote the game in Zimbabwe. We managed to get free television links, which meant the locals could watch us. The black people saw us being successful and, by the end of the one-day series [which Zimbabwe won 3-0], a lot of the kids were playing in the streets. Our performances showed to the world that we will not be forgotten."

His own signing for Kent generated much interest in Zimbabwe and he appreciates the importance of performing through the summer, particularly in bigger games such as the final today, to maintain the profile of the sport during an otherwise quiet period.

"We are at a watershed. It will take a lot of unsung work from administrators if we are to continue to penetrate the black communities in Zimbabwe," he said. "White people make up only about one per cent of the population, so you have to learn to live together. Soccer is the first game for the black people, but they are natural athletes and pick up sport very quickly. But it must be long term. Nobody I coach in the immediate future is going to bowl for Zimbabwe. It will be his son or even grandson, brought up in an atmosphere of cricket."

RICHARD HOBSON

SURREY'S PATH TO FINAL

GROUP MATCHES: April 28 (h): lost to Kent by four wickets. April 30 (a): beat Gloucestershire by three wickets. May 2 (h): beat British Universities by six wickets. May 5 (a): beat Hampshire by 185 runs. May 12 (h): beat Sussex by 11 runs.

QUARTER-FINAL: May 27 (a): beat Essex by six wickets.

SEM-FINAL: June 10 (h): beat Leicestershire by 130 runs.

for England — "but that was three or four years ago. We both grew up. He realised he had made a mistake and I have made mistakes myself in our relationship. The game is too short not to forgive."

Wells will be one of several Kent batsmen ready to get after Salisbury, whose handling of the pressure will be monitored by those who nurture hopes of England fielding an effective leg spinner in the near future. David Lloyd, the national coach, spoke passionately at Old Trafford earlier this week about the need for this to happen and Salisbury remains the likeliest candidate.

Salisbury concedes that he felt burdened by the knowledge that he was joining Surrey as the club's only spinner, but has worked hard to strengthen his game and silence the behind-the-hand sniggers about him being a "one four-ball an over" man. Guidance and inspiration

MCC celebrate the bridging of big gap

By BARNEY SPENDER

SHENLEY PARK (final day of three): MCC beat Pakistan A by ten wickets

MEMBERS of MCC do not usually need an excuse to blow the top off a bottle of champagne, but they were given one yesterday anyway when the club recorded its first first-class victory since beating Essex, the champion county, at the start of the 1984 season.

But while the game's founding club had cause to celebrate, there was a touch of concern for the touring team who, after a defeat by Derbyshire, have now lost two games in succession.

"It's always disappointing to lose but we were up against a good team and I think the performance graph is improving," Agha Zahid, the Pakistani coach, said.

Discipline was certainly the missing factor when they allowed themselves to be bowled out for 119 on the first morning. They did, however, keep the game going until just before lunch on the final day.

In mitigation, the Asia Cup tournament has deprived them of an experienced core, making this a development tour more than anything else. "It is a very young side with very little experience of first-class cricket and none at all of English conditions. Hopefully, by the time they leave, they will be better players and closer to the step up to Test cricket," Zahid said.

Of the players on show, Shoaib Akhtar, the feisty 21-year-old fast bowler from Rawalpindi, who took five for 64 in the MCC first innings, looks the prime candidate for the move up.

MCC bowlers, led by Hamish Anthony, who had match figures of ten for 115, took the last five wickets to allow Asif Din and Mark Lavender to knock off the 15 runs required before lunch.

PAKISTAN A: First Innings: 119 (Salam Elahi 53, H A G Anthony 6 for 34).

Second Innings: All Nawaz c G W Flower b Shoaib Akhtar 114, Salam Elahi c Francis b Jeph 34, Rene Cassam b Jeph 15, Hasan Rizvi b Shoaib Akhtar 10, Muhammad Wasim b Jeph 10, Mubeen Jamshed c Lavender b Jeph 12, Tawab Qadir b Jeph 10, Asif Mahmood c Lavender b Anthony 31, Irfan Fazi c Gurnaway b Anthony 11, Asif Mahmood c Anthony b Shoaib Akhtar 5, Shoaib Akhtar not out 1, G W Flower 78, Shoaib Akhtar 5 for 64, Asif Mahmood 4 for 90.

Third Innings: Asif Din not out 12, M P Lavender not out 6.

Total (no wicket) 118

BOWLING: Shoaib Akhtar 1-30-12-0; Asif Mahmood 1-0-0-0.

Umpires: P Willey and M R Benson.

Leading lights: Lord's hosted a rare gathering yesterday, as all nine captains of the Test-playing countries convened to debate the current issues of the game. Their recommendations will be put before the inaugural meeting today of the new cricket committee of the International Cricket Council at a West End hotel.

The Test captains have only met formally once before, during the political imbroglio that preceded the World Cup 18 months ago, and the timing and venue of the meeting yesterday gave them a more relaxed opportunity to present their case on a variety of concerns confronting the game today.

High on the captains' agenda was the volume of international cricket now being played around the world. In 1996, 41 Test matches were staged, along with 111 one-day internationals, of which Pakistan, astonishingly, took part in 42.

Views on the imminent establishment of a world championship for Test cricket, and on the future structure and frequency of the World Cup, were also being sought. Other subjects included the extended use of television replays to adjudicate on the validity of catches and an Australian proposal that grounds with floodlights should be free to use them to expedite play in Test cricket during periods of poor light.

The captains are, from the left, back row: Hansie Cronje (South Africa), Wasim Akram (Pakistan), Alistair Campbell (Zimbabwe), Courtney Walsh (West Indies), Stephen Fleming (New Zealand). Front: Sachin Tendulkar (India), Mark Taylor (Australia), Michael Atherton (England), Arjuna Ranatunga (Sri Lanka).

ROWING

Britain pull away in World Cup pursuit

FROM MIKE ROSEWELL, ROWING CORRESPONDENT IN LUCERNE

THE Great Britain coxless four of Steve Redgrave, Matthew Pinsent, Tim Foster and James Cracknell cannot fail to win the World Cup in their boat class. First place in their heat here yesterday assured them direct passage to the final tomorrow, when even sixth place will make them unassailable.

Not that sixth place looks likely. Pinsent eased his colleagues home ahead of Germany. Even so, the time was one second faster than the other heat, in which a more frantic Romania finished ahead of France and Italy. The only surprise for the British was that they trailed Poland at 500 metres, reached in a purported 1m18sec, although this time, and that given for 1,000 metres was queried by them after the race.

Bob Thatcher and Ben Hunt-Davis, Britain's other World Cup leaders, still have it all to do in the coxless pairs. They won with something to spare to reach the semi-finals today but the crew is not complacent. "Whoever wins out of us, France, Croatia and Lithuania can win the World Cup," Hunt-Davis said. Croatia were one of Britain's victims yesterday.

Guin Batten, the Great Britain woman sculler, experienced kinder "seeding" yesterday than she did in Paris and took advantage, qualifying in first place. Greg Searle, Britain's Henley-winning sculler, was less fortunate, coming up against Izotk Cop, of Slovenia, the world champion and World Cup winner. Searle finished in second place and faces a repechage today.

The women's coxless pair of Dot Blackie and Cath Bishop made the double scull of Gillian Lindsay and Miriam Batten will face repechages today, too, but their prospects look good. Both found themselves in the fastest heats yesterday, finishing second and third respectively.

Tracy Langlands and Sarah Birch, survivors of recent women's lightweight trials, made a first international appearance in the lightweight doubles, achieving second to book a semi-final place.

Unlike their heavyweight colleagues, however, they were in the slowest heat. The British heavyweight eight had a tense wait for their evening heat after racing was halted in the late afternoon because of one of Lucerne's spectacular storms. The British found themselves up against Australia, unbeaten since their appearance in Europe three weeks ago. Britain could not break the trend.

The British lightweight eight, fresh from their nail-biting Henley success, cruised to a win, and direct passage to the final, in their heat yesterday. Jason Keys, the stroke, appeared to have his men under control and John Deakin, the ebullient cox who won two Henley medals, was saving his inspirational energy.

NatWest Interest Rates

Interest rates applicable to Business Overdraft Agreements* and Business Loan Agreements* are increased by 1/4% per annum with effect from 11 July 1997.

*This notice does not apply to agreements which specify the rate as fixed or linked to Base Rate.

NatWest

National Westminster Bank Plc, 41 Lothbury, London EC2P 2BP

Rocca rolls past rest's rhythm blues

Then, however, Rocca injured a shoulder in Germany

Lehman, of the United States, retained his lead after three rounds of the Loch Lomond World Invitational. He went round in 67 yesterday.

Perhaps this was why Montgomerie had a relatively lackluster 70 to be four under par on a day when scoring was very low. Mark James had a 65, as did Els. Peter Hedblom and Lee Westwood had 66s while Payne Stewart came home in 30. On a day when the second round had to be completed before the third round could begin, Fulke

Slow play is one of the bugbears of the European Tour at the moment. The players do not like it because it disrupts their rhythm. It is no fun for spectators, either. It also plays havoc with television schedules, and, these days, that is an increasingly important consideration. It is high time that the Tour got to grips with it.

tags at the turn disappear. Alison Rose, the British champion, and Hilary Monaghan came through at the 19th after Elaine Ratcliffe and Karen Stupples. The Curtis Cup pair, three-potted, while Janice Moodie and Lesley Nicholson emerged as winners on the 18th green. It was then plain sailing as Rose and Moodie won their singles to on the final green by Eleanor Pilgrim over Camilla Pearson-Andersen, who worked to take a penalty drop when her drive found thick grass beside a railway track, set up the success for Wales. The other two points came from Natalie Evans and Vicki Thomas, 42, a veteran campaigner of the past 12 championships.

Opens are about patience and Nicholas, Neumann and Trish Johnson, whose only blemish in a round of 69 was a double-bogey seven at the last. The result of a bad drive and an amateurish top into a wetlands hazard in front of putting was much improved — 28 putts only — thanks to a tip that she was moving too much on her stroke. "I concentrated on keeping my left side still and it worked," she said. Now for the driving tin

By DAVID POWELL, ATHLETICS CORRESPONDENT

Allahgreen

Russia, who won in 12.97sec. The men's 110m hurdles final will be re-run after the jury of appeal viewed a video recording to decide that Frank Busemann, from Germany, the apparent winner, had made a false start. Ross Baillie, from Scotland, and Damian Greaves, a Newham and Essex Beagle, finished fifth and eighth respectively.

Bosra Sham would have won seats (as her trainer, Henry Cecil, suggested) beyond question. The fact is that she didn't win.

I quite agree with Barnes that all jockeys (and indeed all sportsmen) make mistakes, but if Kieren Fallon truly

Black of Zimbabwe, this year — played there in the same championships?

Yours sincerely,
SUSAN HILLYARD,
Labyrinthum House,
Great Longstone,
Bakewell,
Derbyshire.

BY OUR SPORTS STAFF

Tuesday at Lansdowne Road, while Newcastle United meet PSV Eindhoven. The winners and losers play-off the following night. Celtic's large follow-

Black, of Zimbabwe, this year — played there in the same championships?
Yours sincerely,
SUSAN HILLYARD,
Laburnum House,
Great Longstone,
Bakewell,
Derbyshire.

Celtic play Derry City on Tuesday at Lansdowne Road, while Newcastle United meet PSV Eindhoven. The winners and losers play-off the following night. Celtic's large following in Ireland were denied the chance to see the Italian when the club last played in Dublin two months ago because he had been suspended by the club over an outburst in his dispute over contract terms. Brown would not confirm reports that Henrik Larsson, a forward, would be joining the club from Feyenoord for £2 million.

CYCLING 48

Stage winner is placed last for Tour show of force

SPORT

SATURDAY JULY 12 1997

TENNIS 51

Rusedski's defeat leaves Britain struggling in Kiev

Brittle wins rugby's long-running battle

BY MARK SOULSTER

CLIFF BRITTLE was last night voted chairman of the new Rugby Football Union (RFU) management committee. He polled 599 votes, to 357 for Bob Rogers.

For the second day running, central London was invaded by men from the shires scenting blood. On Thursday, it had been the pro-hunting lobby, anxious to maintain its sporting traditions, which paraded in Hyde Park. Last night, it was the turn of the yeomen of Middle England, who represent the smaller rugby union clubs that form the backbone of the game, as the power struggle for the soul of the sport continued.

The majority of those at the annual meeting of the RFU last night backed Brittle against Rogers. The RFU committee's candidate.

Their standard-bearer was Fran Cotton, fresh from triumphs in South Africa, who urged support for Brittle who, Cotton said, had singlehandedly stood for the principles of tradition and integrity — especially in engineering England's readmittance to the five nations' championship and a more even distribution of the financial spoils throughout the game.

Rogers: stressed experience

"It is time truth, balance and objectivity was brought to this election," Cotton said. "We must have someone with integrity, tenacity and drive to uphold, safeguard and develop interest at all levels of the game.

"If any man has shown that over the past 18 months, it is Cliff Brittle. The game should be saying: 'Thank God for Cliff Brittle'."

Cotton, the manager of the successful British Isles tour, said that Brittle's vision had been to develop northern-hemisphere rugby, as there was no reason why the southern hemisphere should "remain the dominant influence in world rugby".

Rogers, who enjoyed the support of Will Carling, the former England captain, had played on his 29 years' administrative experience and his belief that he could unify the various factions. "We must move forward together. It is important to restore integrity and credibility into the game. My vision is real and I will deliver," Rogers said.

Earlier in the meeting, further fallout from England's temporary expulsion from the five nations' championship last year — its timing, who knew and when — clouded the meeting at the London Hilton Hotel. At the start of proceedings, John Richardson, the retiring president of the RFU, maintained that Brittle alone knew that England had been expelled, that he had been informed by fax but had chosen to say nothing. Brittle denied this. In the interim, Sir Tasker Watkins QC, president of the Welsh Rugby Union, Vernon Pugh, its chairman, Tom Kiernan, chairman of the five nations' committee, and Dr Syd Millar have all maintained that the RFU was aware of the situation.

Addressing Richardson, Cotton asked: "Are you calling Sir Tasker, Vernon Pugh, Tom Kiernan and Syd Millar liars? That is the clear implication and, on behalf of those people, I resent what is being said."

Looking back over his presidency, Richardson admitted that it had not been "a happy year" and he lamented that the internecine strife that has bedevilled the game could not have been settled privately without recourse to media leaks. In supporting the committee's nomination of Rogers, Richardson said that he felt his man would be "good for peace and unity in our game — and we need that".

Colin Herdridge the RFU treasurer, said that it had been a watershed year for the game's finances, and that steps were being taken to ensure that the loss of £6.2 million last year would soon translate into a surplus. Herdridge maintained

Brittle: enjoyed support that £100 million would flow into the game over the next five years, the bulk of it from the BSkyB television deal, the long-form contract for which was signed on Wednesday. Enshrined in that was the RFU's veto over pay-per-view broadcasting.

Tony Hallett, the acting RFU chief executive, outlined impending sponsorship deals worth some £2 million to replace, among others, those ended by Pilkington and Save and Prosper. Agreements would be signed and names revealed over the next two or three weeks, Hallett said, with the knockout cup being sponsored to the tune of £500,000, and another £200,000 for the county championship. A lucrative sponsor for the five nations' championship would also be announced in the near future.

Herdridge defended criticism from junior clubs over the division of spoils, which will see £3.2 million being shared by 60 or 70 clubs and £3.6 million going 2,000 others. There was also criticism of the paucity of information contained in the accounts — a point which the union was prepared to concede.

□ Sale, the Pilkington Cup runners-up and for whom Cotton played, have become the latest club to be taken over by a private company. Tourney, the sports management firm, has provided £2.5 million, and taken control of the rugby side at Sale. The company will lease Heywood Road.

Hill saga starts to spin out of control

BY MICHAEL CALVIN

THE saga of Damon Hill's sullied reputation showed ominous signs of beginning to spiral out of control at Silverstone yesterday, when an unconvincing damage limitation exercise raised more questions about his future than it answered.

The indignity of finishing twentieth in free practice for the British Grand Prix, one place behind unregarded team-mate Pedro Diniz, was almost an irrelevance on a day of unflattering headlines, understandable anger and confusion.

Tom Walkinshaw, the Arrows owner, whose critical interpretation of Hill's approach to the problems of a struggling team has overshadowed preparations for tomorrow's race, insisted that there was "no crisis". He branded as "a lie" speculation that he had threatened the world championship with dismissal.

Hill, at the centre of a scrum outside the team motorhome, mounted a robust defence of his reputation, stung by the implications of a lack of application.

"Tom is entitled to put a rocket up the bum of his drivers," he said. "I've had much worse criticism, but I'm shocked by how much has been made out of it. I don't want to let anyone down, least of all myself.

"I want to be back in the hunt for the world championship as soon as possible, and I'd like it to be with Arrows if they are able to offer me that package. Money is not the issue. I want to win. I don't want to be fifteenth, tenth or even sixth. I want to be first. That's what makes me go. That's what makes me fired up. That's what makes me want to race."

"I'm not keen to draw comparisons between the package represented by Tom and what we actually have. It would not be wise for a situation to evolve where one party starts to claim another party is not pulling his weight. We are all in this together."

Since even the merest hint of discord between Hill and Walkinshaw will be magnified in the present climate, the driver's stab at diplomacy was fatally flawed. Anyone associated with the controversy was canvassed for an opinion.

Bernard Dudot, the man behind Renault's all-conquering engine, set the tone of the debate by insisting that Hill would have successfully defended his world title, had he stayed with Williams. "It was a mistake to let Damon go," he said. "I wish he was still with us. He would have made the difference this year."

Frank Williams was predictably non-committal, but

Hill had more to worry about at Silverstone yesterday, finishing twentieth in practice and then finding more problems over his situation at Arrows. Photograph: Marc Aspland restated his admiration for his former test driver. He argued: "He's struggled with his car, but the Damon Hill I know is a world champion racing driver who has won a large number of races. That's all you need to say about him."

Inevitably, he was inveigled into a broader appreciation of Hill's employment prospects. Williams estimated that 12 of the 22 drivers on the grid will change seats at the end of this season, but stressed that it was "probable" that he would retain Jacques Villeneuve and Heinz-Harald Frentzen. "It's therefore probable that Damon will not be driving for us in 1998," he said, when asked whether Hill's immediate reinstatement was an option. Intriguingly, he continued: "Certainly, if circumstances come together, I would re-employ him. He's a great driver."

The minefield of potential problems, created by the situation, was inadvertently highlighted by John Barnard, the design guru brought in from Ferrari to provide a car worthy of a world champion's talent. He innocently created unnecessary confusion by highlighting necessary development work. "First of all I had to make the car safe," he said at an official press conference.

"The next issue was to make it reliable. We have started to finish races and that is a step forward." It was not until further investigation revealed that his comments referred to a wishbone failure at Magny-Cours that Arrows' critics were diverted.

New components, designed to cope with greater stress loadings, will be used at Silverstone. This, in itself, was a typical example of Formula One's constant evolutionary process. But, in the prevailing climate, it merely stimulated fevered imaginations.

"I believe that if the team can get the right power plant, Damon wants to stay," Walkinshaw said. He reconfirmed that such a package is in place, and will be announced at the end of next month. But, this weekend, few people were listening.

Another poor race tomorrow, when Hill's performance will be the focal point for a capacity 90,000 crowd on the old airfield, and Arrows will be poisoned by assumptions of inferiority.

Kendall's move brings writ

SHEFFIELD United have issued a writ against Everton and their new manager, Howard Kendall, who left Bramall Lane to take charge at Goodison Park last month (David Maddock writes). United hope to recover £1 million in what they claim were agreed levels of compensation for Kendall's services and what is suggested as being a breach of contract. It is understood a figure of £175,000 has been offered.

Everton have agreed to part with £7.5 million to secure the services of Fabrizio Ravanelli from Middlesbrough. They hope to talk to the player soon.

Paul Ince was on Merseyside yesterday for a medical before joining Liverpool, even though his proposed £4 million transfer from Internazionale has still to be resolved.

Blackburn Rovers have signed the Sweden forward, Martin Dahlin, from AS Roma.

Surrey aim to disperse storm clouds

BY ALAN LEE CRICKET CORRESPONDENT

LORD'S DETAILS

KENT (from): M V Fleming, M J Walker, D P Fulton, T R Ward, A P Wells, M A Eatham, N J Long, P A Strang, S J Marsh (captain), M J McCague, D W Headley, G R Cowdrey, A P Ledger, J B D Thompson.

SURREY (from): A D Brown, A J Stewart, B C Hollies, G P Thorpe, A J Hollies (captain), C C Lewis, M A Butcher, J D Ratcliffe, I D K Salisbury, M P Bicknell, Stephen Mullaney, J E Gonyea.

UMPIRES: D R Shepherd and G Sharp. Third umpire: J W Holder. TELEVISION: Sky Sports 1: Live from 10.20am. BBC2: Highlights 8.10.9.10pm.

in the Sunday league, their season suffered another embarrassing blow when they were knocked out of the NatWest Trophy by Nottinghamshire on Wednesday. This final is a last opportunity of reprieve and the coach, Dave Gilbert, said yesterday: "We have got to win and there is no reason why we shouldn't."

"What I have been trying to ram into the guys," he said, "is that the achievement is not reaching a final but winning it." It does not bode well that Gilbert should feel the need of such emphasis; it also speaks volumes for his concern over the priorities and focus of some of his players.

Both Gilbert and the club committee are wary of the distractions of the commercial and contractual interests of some players in a dressing-room in which half of the team is driven by one highly entrepreneurial agent, Gareth James.

If their worst fears are realised in defeat today, harsh words will undoubtedly ensue, perhaps followed by the departure of one or two players. Gilbert, whose own contract is up for renewal after this season, may hang his future on it, though he will hope to be spared the stress.

If the promised changes to the domestic structure come about next season, rather than in 1999 as is more likely, this may be the last year of two knockout cups. Any new system, however, should surely impose a lead-up to the remaining final that resembles the week just past, rather than the absurd September situation in which the NatWest Trophy finalists complete championship fixtures the night before their appearance at Lord's.

Surrey's preparations were dampened by the NatWest defeat but Kent, already out of that tournament, have enjoyed five free days. In this time, training and net practice has been blended with golf at Royal St George's and a session of go-karting, the latest outing in their team bonding programme.

Cowdrey: gamble

Kent's prospects of adding to their three Benson and Hedges triumphs have been enhanced by the clearance of their casualty ward. Graham Cowdrey is the last man to prove his fitness but, such is his influence in one-day cricket, that a calculated risk on his hamstring seems certain to be taken.

Cowdrey's cricket has been restricted to one Sunday league match in six weeks and to play him today would be, in the words of the Kent coach, John Wright, "taking a punt". Wright, however, sees Cowdrey as the man to disrupt Surrey's two spin bowlers, Saqlain Mushtaq and Ian Salisbury. "Life is a gamble," he said, "and playing Cowdrey is a gamble I am prepared to take."

If Cowdrey is included, it will be at the expense of David Fulton, who has only played two Benson and Hedges matches — the 1995 final and the semi-final this season. Trevor Ward's knee injury has responded to treatment and Martin McCague is also fit to resume a hostile one-day ball pairing with Dean Headley.

Kent's game-plan will hope for an early breach by these two but depend rather more on frustrating Surrey's stroke-makers by giving them nothing loose. As Kent are seeking to bat first and Surrey prefer to chase, the toss may be largely academic. So too, on the day of a final, are the results of previous games, but it is worth saying that Kent have beaten Surrey three times this season in one-day cricket. They would trade them all for victory today.

Spin doctors, page 49

Think First

You want lower phone bills?
It's your call!

Open up your wallet with First Telecom and you'll find a better way to manage your phone bills. You'll have up to 50% off on RTT (long distance and international) calls from home with their Friends and Family service. Just compare what you're currently paying for a five minute call with the savings you could be making.

First Telecom RTT Friends & Family Savings
USA	$1.05	45%
AUSTRALIA	$2.20	46%
SINGAPORE	$3.10	39%
MALAYSIA	$4.95	40%
JAPAN	$3.45	51%
HONG KONG	$3.10	45%
INDIA	$5.35	36%
SOUTH AFRICA	$4.57	49%
UK-Long Distance	36p	19%

With First Telecom's new help you'll have a better way to manage your phone bills. You'll have up to 50% off on RTT (long distance and international) calls from home with their Friends and Family service. Just compare what you're currently paying for a five minute call with the savings you could be making.

You'll have up to 50% off on RTT (long distance and international) calls from home with their Friends and Family service. Just compare what you're currently paying for a five minute call with the savings you could be making.

First Telecom

0800 458 9191

First Telecom is a member of the BT Group.

tski's defeat
ives Britain
ing in Kiev

Fashion shifts to the versatile dress suit shopping • 3

THE  TIMES

THE ~~WORLD~~ TIMES
weekend

Hardy Amies on his horror of women gardening

gardening • 5

SATURDAY JULY 12 1997

Libby Purves on how we are all guilty of spending our way to a child-centred society

The spoils of childhood

Born and consume, shop all you flow: Chelsea has a new department store. It is upmarket, beautifully fitted with wide, comfortable galleries and a stage-designer's vision. There is an indoor clock tower and beautiful barley-sugar twist banisters on the wide Edwardian staircases; a soda fountain, hair, salon, clothes and shoes, and books and furniture, and-bikes and games. No, not for you: everything on sale is for children under ten.

Ah well, you say — Chelsea. The King's Road. Drifting Sloane mums in Alice bands trying to fill nanny's day off: affluent access-daddies desperate for something to do which doesn't involve the swimming-pool changing room. But it is not just Chelsea: there is another one twice the size opening soon in Manchester.

and plans for the rest of the nation. And for Europe.

Children's department stores are the latest brainwave from Tim Waterstone, the gentle, civilised, self-deprecating maverick who changed the face of British bookselling in the Eighties. He has called the stores Daisy & Tom, after his three-year-old daughter and the son of Christopher Thompson, of the publishers D.C. Thompson, his backers. But his personal credentials for starting such an enterprise are impeccable.

"Look, I have eight children, from 34 down to three," he says. "I want to create a shop which pays children the compliment of offering good quality in surroundings designed for them. We will not be selling tat. OK, I did rashly tell one journalist that we won't stock Barbie but, as it happens, we will. But we will not be majoring on Barbie. Lots of good quality wooden toys."

Good quality wooden toys are, of course, the kind of thing that usually appeal rather more to wistful parents than to their techno-generation children. There is also, true to his Waterstone's background, the biggest children's bookshop in the country right at the centre, with a firmer promise of good storytelling sessions and absolutely no teen trash fiction.

The Chelsea Daisy & Tom opens at the end of the month, and the proud father showed me round the half-finished shop: the working hand-carved fairground carousel, the murals, the Germanic clocktower with gilt faces and moving figures, the puppet theatre on the clothes floor featuring the only antique marionettes ever to be run by programmed animation.

In the entrance there is another coup de théâtre: an electric train set which runs under the Perspex floor you walk on. Rather unkindly, I pointed out that any normal toddler's first action will be to fall on its face and press its nose to the floor to see the train better. Incoming shoppers will trip over them. Mr Waterstone firmly led me away to show off the miniature lavatories with customised tiles.

Decadent? Institutionalised spoiling? Western sentimental fantasy, insulting to a world where six-year-olds toil in dark factories? Perhaps. But it is very pretty, and it would be hard to begrudge Mr Waterstone another success. At least his commercial policy is quixotically fixed on pretty shops and friendly atmosphere; unlike that of bigger, colder-eyed public companies who entice children into an atmosphere of hard-sell. It is a vast market (£320 million in children's books, nearly £2 billion on toys, uncounted billions in clothing spent in the UK each year) and most of it is certainly not conducted amid such cranky Edwardian elegance, nor in such a kindly and literate atmosphere.

With a few honourable exceptions, children's goods inhabit tacky warehouses, overpriced boutiques, or snobbish cramped children's departments which make few concessions to the smaller customer's real comfort. If Waterstone the kindly dolphin has decided to swim in the shark pool, perhaps we should be grateful.

But the advent of Daisy & Tom does make you reflect on what has happened to Britain over the past few decades. Parents do not need surveys such as Asda's recent What Price A Child? to remind them that it costs tens of thousands to be a consumer parent. These reports are fascinating, if only because they encourage all parents—consumer or not—to compare their own expenditure with the surreal-sounding figures conjured up. They always feature items such as equipment 0-5 years at £2,000, and birthdays and Christmas five-11 years at £4,614, as well as more credible costings for clothes, food, holidays, transport and educational extras. The assumption is that if it is available, you'll try to afford it,

Continued on page 2

SHOPPING.....23	GARDENING.....46	PROPERTY.....78	FEATURES.....10	HOME LIFE.....11	COUNTRY LIFE.....13	TRAVEL.....15-21	GAMES.....23
-----------------	------------------	-----------------	-----------------	------------------	---------------------	------------------	--------------

Ditch the plastic this summer and invest in modern garden furniture that looks elegant too, says Caroline Griffiths

Reserve a chic place in the sun

ABOVE: Giselle bistro table, sale price £59. Giselle bistro chair, sale price £45, from selected branches of House of Fraser (0171-963 2236)

RIGHT: Spring table, £300, oval chair, £132, plus p&p, (also available in square back) from Bisca Design. Shaw Moor Farm, Haroma, York (01439 771702)

BELOW: Hand-forged iron Hour Glass table, £345; sun chair, £245, (including cushion) mail order from The Iron Design Company, Summer Carr Farm, Thornton-le-Moor, Northallerton, North Yorks (01609 778143)

ABOVE: Triconfort director's chair, £410, from the Normandy range; balcony table, £635, adjusts to three heights, from Interiors Furniture and Furnishing, 224-226 York Road, Battersea, SW11 (0171-824 2400); mail order (01279 816001)

RIGHT: Um table with weatherproof slate top, £1,364; weatherproof Chiose chairs, £310 each (cushion not included), from Marston & Langinger, 192 Ebury Street, SW1 (0171-824 8818)

ABOVE: Wrought iron and rattan Farinolo glass top table, £175; Farinolo chair, £78, from The Pier (0171-814 5020)

Continued from page 1

be it a designer Swedish highchair or a pair of cute £80 trainers for a baby who can't walk yet.

It goes wider, too. If children's goods are a massive commercial sector, so are children's entertainments. Moppets whose parents counted themselves lucky to be taken around Kenwood now have the prospect of Alton Towers and Thorpe Park. Chessington and Legoland. Holiday companies fall over themselves to offer child-friendly holidays — though not precisely family holidays, because the emphasis is on crèches and clubs and other devices of containment. When I was a beach brat in France, we used to look with horrified amazement at French children corralled in Le Club Mickey while maman sunbathed; we Brits had family life on holiday, even if the entertainment was limited to sulphurous egg sandwiches and Burying Father.

What has happened? What led us all the way from Derry & Toms to Daisy & Tom? It is not so long since we were a nation which dressed its young in cutdown adult clothing (remember heavy, hairy crabs which cut into your armpits?). Children were expected to watch their dads play cricket on Saturday, and to wriggle on chairs during long, boring Sunday visits to great-granny with no reward but a dry macaroon. No McDonald's, no inflatable ball-ponds and foam-rubber Underworlds. Toys were fewer and all too often educational. No Nike Airs or Doc for us, just brogues or those loathsome Mam'zelle Casuals with fringed leather bits on the instep. Young reader, you may not believe this, but in the dark 1960s it was commonplace for girls to wear their school shoes in the holidays.

There has been both pleasure and dismay for my generation, watching it all grow. Even I, as a mother in the early Eighties, came too early for such aids to infant rearing as all-purpose baby chairs. Tumble Tots classes, under three music sessions, junior judo and baby massage. We had to make do with carryots and dancing classes so unchanged since the 1950s that it was instructive to listen to my then three-year-old son in conversation with a tractor driver on the subject. "Do you go to Mrs G's, then?" "Yes, I did that." "Does she still make you do good-toes-bad-toes? Bet she does." "And bunny-hops." "I used to hate bunny-hops." "Yeah, and being a sunflower." There was some continuity, at least.

Of course, there are still children who go biking on their own, build dens in the hedge and roll in mud; who still think it is a big deal to go into Ipswich, and have not discovered that C&A is not a designer label. But television soon shows them the new kiddy consumer deal, and eventually they want it. And I can't blame them. There is no

'If you live without hope it makes sense to fulfil children's dreams'

"Town and country planning has ignored children for decades in favour of cars, and street crime." Photograph: Helmut Deutsch

	1967	(REAL TERMS)	1997
Pushchair	£4	£36.80	£100
Cot	£7	£64.40	£200
Highchair	£6	£56.20	£40
Ice lolly	6d	23p	45p
Pocket of crisps	3d	12p	22p
London Zoo	4/-	£1.84	£8
Tooth fairy	6d	23p	£2
Pocket money	7/-	£3.22	£1.68
Action Man	32/6	£14.90	£9.99

point parents inveighing against commercial exploitation of childhood: we encourage it. The advertisers' theory of "pester power" and direct advertising to children would not work if we didn't give in. But we do. It is easy to become addicted to the moment when a loved child widens his eyes and gasps with amazement at the miraculous gift or treat the power of our money has brought. I never enjoyed being a consumer so much as during the years when my children were toddlers: the wind-up plastic drill, the fort, the steam engine, the roundabouts, are memories as glorious for me as for them. The marketers are only giving us what they reckon we will buy. Not just novelty or cuteness, but a whole package designed to reassure us — for money — that the world welcomes our children and cares what happens to them.

Guilt helps, too. There is the obvious guilt of working parents, but there is something wider, too. When the childless complain at the kiddy industry watch the silly smiles on adult faces as they accompany their little ones round Disneyland Paris's Small World ride, watching animated happy dolls dance in national dress as you pass from one to the next. Aaaaah! We know it is an illusion, but we have paid good money for it.

Guilt also has a more immediate aspect. British town and country planning has ignored children for decades in favour of cars, and street crime. William Brown and the Outlaws are no more, still less their smaller followers. We cannot give them freedom because of traffic and lurking paedophiles, and the embarrassed fear which has choked the old social instincts. In living memory all adults still felt able to question, reprove and protect all children. Today we don't. Part of the trauma of the James Bulger case was that his abductors were not challenged by anyone who saw them march him to the railway line.

So we keep the children in and glid the cage with bedroom televisions and computer consoles. We can't enjoy a family walk through the urine-stained underpasses of the cities wrecked by cars, so we strap them in yet another car and go to Alton Towers. We fear that they won't get jobs, will be poisoned by pollution or burnt by the hole in the ozone layer. If you live without faith or much hope, it makes sense to fulfil children's dreams right now, while they are small and the dreams are simple.

Well, there are worse places for a child than standing on a pedestal, receiving tribute. At least there is love behind it, and at least the Daisy & Tom shop is designed so that the working mother or the access daddy will be obliged to stand and look at the puppets or the carousel and share a child's enjoyment, rather than flashing the plastic, shouldering the loot and running out of the place with a bewildered toddler in tow. There are worse sicknesses in society than spoiling children.

But the trouble is that if a fairytale of imagination and bright play is available for sale while free parks and children's libraries are run down and the streets grow ever more crime-ridden, the gulf between rich and poor widens, cruelly, just at the age when everybody should be equal.

And what about those children, the ones who are economically shut out from all the fun and prettiness, and know it? When I left Daisy & Tom, I saw a familiar figure in a Tube station: a blank-eyed teenage girl who begs with a pale baby in her arms. Commuters were walking past, accelerating, looking away in guilty irritation at what was being done to their emotions.

It is being carried out quite calculatedly by this girl mother — I have spoken to her several times and she is not without choices in her life. She has considerable success, exploiting our unease about children in her own low-tech way. Those who walk past often throw her money, because of the baby crawling on the dirty subterranean concrete. Just throw the money at the child and hurry on through life: ah well, we all do a bit of that.

◆ Cover photograph by courtesy of Daisy & Tom and Hamleys.

FORCED TO SUFFER IN A CAGED HELL

This poor, suffering creature is one of twelve neglected horses recently discovered in Cheshire. Its coat infested with lice and its ribs clearly visible, the horse was left to starve in this small cage. Many of the others were in far worse condition — one sadly died on the day we were called.

He immediately evacuated the horses to the nearest ILPH rehabilitation centre, where our staff are now working to save them.

Cruelty to horses is still too common in Britain. As a charity, we need your support to help end the suffering.

ILPH field officer Paul Teasdale, despite thirty years experience with horses, was shocked by what he saw.

Please help us to continue our work by returning the coupon today with a donation. Thank you.

I WANT TO HELP STOP CRUELTY TO HORSES

☐ I enclose a donation of £ to support your work (payable to ILPH please)

☐ I would like more information about your work and how I can become a supporter

Name _____

Address _____

Post Code _____
INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR THE PROTECTION OF HORSES
 Anne Colvin House, Snetterton, Norfolk, NR16 2LR

هناك امه الاصل

فيله في لاند

WEEKEND SAIL RACE
by Caroline Griffiths

WEEKEND · SATURDAY JULY 12 1997

shopping · 3

Shift into top gear

Steer yourself away from stodgy separates and into the fast lane with stylish dress suits, says Heath Brown

Camel needle cord shift dress, £159, Episode, branches nationwide (0171-589 4279). White fine sheer knit cardigan, £25, Etam, selected branches nationwide (0171-494 7732)

Camel needle cord jacket, £239, Episode, branches nationwide (0171-589 4279). Blue fine rib vest, £37, Jigsaw, 126-127 New Bond Street, W1, and branches nationwide (0171-491 4484). Sage pinstripe fine wool trousers, £140, Jaeger, 200 Regent Street, W1, and branches nationwide (0171-200 4000). Choc suede gold buckle sling back shoes, £59.95, Bertie, 36 South Molton Street, W1, and branches nationwide (0171-995 2002)

The key word in any woman's wardrobe should be versatility. Although one-off wonders in vibrant colours and avant garde designs will always be tempting, getting carried away and indulging yourself usually only leaves a hole in your pocket. And often, such an outfit is so memorable that when you've worn it once, you're unable to bring it out of the wardrobe again until a decent time period has elapsed.

Sensible dressing doesn't have to be boring, though. Just take a look at the dress suit, which is the proper way to describe a tailored shift dress with matching jacket. For summer, it is flattering to the figure in a neutral colour such as camel, sand or deep chocolate brown. Beware staple black or navy because these can look rather severe in the bright sunshine, but white is a classic look, especially with a tan.

ABOVE: Camel needle cord jacket, £239, Episode, 172 Regent Street, W1; 16 St Anne's Square, Manchester, and branches nationwide (0171-589 4279). Blue fine rib vest, £37, Jigsaw, 126-127 New Bond Street, W1, and branches nationwide (0171-491 4484). Pink silk and cream lace skirt, £45, French Connection, 249 Regent Street, W1, and branches nationwide (0171-580 2507)

A dress suit is undoubtedly comfortable, with clean, uncluttered lines. And few ensembles solve the eternal problem of summer office wear more stylishly. After six o'clock, drop the jacket, replace it with a neat cardigan and you have an elegant yet relaxed outfit, ideal for informal after-work outings. If the occasion is more glamorous, drop the dress instead and wear the jacket over a lacy slip frock.

You can create a different look again by adding a pair of well-cut contrasting trousers and matching top; or wear the jacket with a lighter blouse and a darker pair of pants to create a trouser suit. However, when mixing and matching, ensure that the contrasting colours you wear with the jacket or dress tone well. Pitch the contrast too bright and you will end up with a garish mismatch. After all, the beauty of the dress suit is its simplicity — and versatility.

LEFT: Camel needle cord jacket, £239, Episode, branches nationwide (0171-589 4279). Beige choc stripe ankle tie shoes, £49.99, Ravel, 184-188 Oxford Street, W1, and branches nationwide (0171-631 0224)

THREE OF A KIND

GO FOR the strong, sporty look and choose cotton cropped bra and knicker sets with an androgynous edge. Here are three of the best around. H.B.

Dark blue cotton bra, £12, matching knickers £12, La Senza, 33 King's Road, SW3 (0171-831 1000)

Dark green/cream stripe bra, £10.99; matching knickers, £5.99, Knickerbox, branches nationwide (0171-284 1744)

Pistachio fine cotton bra £18; matching knickers, £11, Calvin Klein, Selfridges, W1; Harrods, SW1 (0171-730 1234)

Sélection Magimix
a unique range for serious cooks

A classic collection of kitchen items from France, Germany and Italy, built to professional standards to work better, and last longer. Shown here the Professional Blender, designed as a rugged, simple, no nonsense workhorse. Powered by a commercial grade 450 watt motor, it has just two speeds to tackle the toughest or most delicate of jobs. Glass goblet and blade are dishwasher safe and come apart for easy cleaning. For more details on the range, write to: Magimix UK Ltd, 115A High Street, Godalming, Surrey GU7 1AQ.

magimix
"The one top class unit because it makes it all so easy"

THOMAS SANDERSON
Europe's Top Selling
CONSERVATORY
SUNBLINDS

...proudly present our new 1997 range of 'SolarTex' beautiful fabrics, the most advanced fabrics available. Recommended by more conservatory companies than any other brand.

Huge range, prompt professional service. All prices include fitting. Call us now and arrange to see this new collection and discover just how these colours can transform your conservatory.

Our 7 day a week free enquiry and brochure line 0800 220603
call now for our free brochure and quote ADA

SAVING EYES ON GLITCHING EYES

THE CHIMNEY BALLOON

RELATE TO STOP CHIMNEY
DRAUGHTS

Stops cool and drafts.
Use safely again and again. Ask for details.

THE CHIMNEY BALLOON CO
Dept TT, 209 Guildford Road
Ash, Hants GU12 8DX
Tel. 02403 5252
Fax 02403 5252

سنة من العمل

Tailor-made for a Hardy annual

Jane Owen discovers why the dressmaker and designer has a horror of lady gardeners

Sir Hardy Amies is to political correctness what King Herod was to child welfare. Age, which has mellowed the Cotswold stone of his converted schoolhouse in Oxfordshire, has not had the same effect on the 87 year old.

"You must be snobbish," he says. "For instance, you must never have those bright plants — busy lizzies — in the garden. And I hate herbaceous borders — they're like ladies whose hats have too many flowers."

The sideswipe is aimed at Gertrude Jekyll, the Edwardian goddess of colour schemes, and herbaceous borders, and at professional lady gardeners "who never admit when they don't know something. It's penis envy you know — they cut off everything in sight".

This momentary peevishness may have something to do with the fact that Sir Hardy blames the demise of a specimen Primula auricula "Hardy Amies" on a certain lady gardener. The plant is worth being irritated about: a black flower with a dazzling white centre circle, or "paste", against the pale green leaves.

The auricula passion — one he shares with George Harrison — began at the Chelsea Flower Show many years ago when he met Brenda Hyatt, an expert in these wonderful plants. Having, presumably, forgiven her for being a lady gardener, he learnt from her all he knows about the plant, from reporting to propagation. It was Ms Hyatt who named the gorgeous black auricula after Sir Hardy.

From a south-facing bench in his small walled garden, Sir Hardy directs his gardener, Kenneth Milnehall, known as "Sam". The garden has been Sam's life for the past three years, and Sir Hardy's passion for the past 25 years.

There is no lawn — just gravel and stone paving with a central path leading up to a fine stone-tiled pavilion in the style of a dovecote. Tailored hails of bay, rosemary cut to show its "legs", lavender, roses and clematis mingle with tulips. There are white tobacco plants.

A path of gravel and stone paving leads to a stone-tiled pavilion including Nicotiana glauca, whose scent perfumes the walled garden on summer evenings. It is all Sir Hardy's design.

"I don't even know how to sew a dress," says the man who has been dressing the seriously rich for the past 51 years, "and I am not a dirt gardener but I have taught Sam all he knows." Roses were Sir Hardy's first love — crimson ones growing in his father's suburban Wembley garden. Now Sir Hardy has a collection of 160 roses including his favourite red, pink and white-striped Rosa mundi, which was first recorded 500 years ago.

The auriculas live on a purpose-built stand under the eaves of the so-called barn. "They hate the rain but they can take frost," Sir Hardy says. I have about 120 show auriculas which have to be repotted every year. They look their best when they are four years old. They have to be watered from below. They like plenty of light but no direct sun, and they like some shade. But they hate heat. And he pots them in the Brenda Hyatt recommended mix of loam, peat, perlite, silver sand, slow-release fertiliser, charcoal, lime and gamma dust.

His protestations at never lifting a green finger come undone when he admits to assiduous deadheading, which really amounts to pruning — "a light shaping in the late autumn and then again in spring". The rose collection lives with the auriculas a few hundred yards from Sir Hardy's main home. In the garden of what he calls "the Barn" — actually, a grand spread including tennis court and greenhouses.

Plant obsessions are one thing. It is a rare talent that can make a useful garden which keeps up its appearance at every season. Sir Hardy says his main influences came from "the upper classes". As he puts it, having gone away to learn near-perfect French and German, he became a Deb's Delight and set about learning the language of the upper classes. He also drank in upper-class garden influences and adopted the maxim that flowers should never be seen from the house.

Having arrived for drinks at one house, an arm is offered and there is a gentle stroll across the village to the Barn for further drinks, passing on the way the enchanting Cotswold cottage where Sir Hardy's sister, Rosemary, lives in the village too, as does Anna Rice.

"Aspect is terribly important and you have to decide what you are going to do in a garden and where you are going to sit — a garden should be used, not just looked at." And, from his upstairs bathroom window, he points out the south-facing bench where he has his evening drink. Even in February.

Sir Hardy Amies studies his collection of roses and auriculas in his garden in Oxfordshire

The black-flowered Primula auricula 'Hardy Amies'

WEEKEND TIPS

- After flowering, prune old-fashioned and shrub roses, shortening back flowered shoots to a healthy bud or side shoot.
- Watch for the gingerspotting of rust on roses, mahonias and hypericums. Spray if necessary.
- Keep thirsty perennials, such as phlox and delphiniums, well watered before they wilt.
- Divide clumps of bearded irises of four years old or more. Replant only the fattest rhizomes, just on the surface and 9in apart, with the rhizome facing south to catch the sun.
- Cut out flowered stems of Euphorbia robiae at ground level when the flowers have faded completely.
- Summer prune apples and pears, to allow the sun to ripen the fruit more fully.
- Stop cucumbers at the desired height and stop fruiting side-growths after the second leaf. Take off male flowers and those on the main stem. Shade in hot weather.
- Give ample water to courgettes, tomatoes, celery, sweetcorn and cauliflowers.

Divide and replant irises

TO ADVERTISE
CALL: 0171 481 1920
FAX: 0171 481 9313

HOMES & GARDENS

TO ADVERTISE
CALL: 0171 481 1920
FAX: 0171 481 9313

GET YOUR FRONT GARDEN IN TRIM.

- Your front garden should say welcome. Four top designers show you how.
- See the front garden of a town house transformed by a dramatic makeover.
- Alan Titchmarsh tells you how to attract butterflies with a flower-filled border.
- Plus a basic guide on how to keep your hedges tidy and shapely all year round.

Gardeners' World
FRONT gardens
AUGUST ISSUE ON SALE NOW.

JUST ZAPP!
YOUR GARAGE DOORS OPEN
FREE FITTING LIMITED OFFER
POWERED BY SOMFY MOTORS

Imagine the convenience and security of being able to open your garage doors without having to get out of your car.

- Made from tough, maintenance-free aluminium
- Durable stove-enamelled finish
- Range of colours
- Automatic locking
- Tailor-made for a perfect fit
- Installed by Guardian's own craftsmen
- High Security

FOR A FREE BROCHURE RING
01484 461010/0171 581 4443
OR RETURN THE COUPON BELOW WITHOUT OBLIGATION
FREEPOST, SEND TODAY NO STAMP REQUIRED

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
POST CODE _____

TELEPHONE _____

GUARDIAN The Property Protectors

AWNINGS DIRECT

An Extensive Range of Colours and Styles
From £295 Information and Brochure Line
FREE PHONE 0800 0740496

SHOPAROUND
APPEARS ON PAGES 12 & 14

automatic Garage Doors

STYLISH • CONVENIENT
SPACE SAVING • HIGH SECURITY
MAINTENANCE FREE

For full details call our brochure hotline on 01392 203299 or write to...
Global SECURITY
GLOBAL SECURITY (ST), FREEPOST (EX140), EXETER EX1 1XZ

SCATTER Clears Cats
from your garden
NIGHT AND DAY, EVERY DAY

Unique programme of computer-controlled ultrasound expels cats from lawns, flower beds, shrubberies, walls and patios

Scatter is the only one that works!
Classic FM Gardeners' Forum, 17th April 1997

SWITCH between low-voltage mains or battery operation at will
NO effect on birds or other pets INAUDIBLE to humans
Scatter is completely safe, installed in minutes.
Try it for 90 days - 5 year guarantee

FREEPHONE 0800 282874
FOR FREE BROCHURE

Scatter, Old Lion Court, High St, Marlborough, Wiltshire SN8 1HQ 01672 511130 Fax 01672 511071
TRADE and OVERSEAS enquiries welcomed

TAKE THE DIRECT ROUTE TO QUALITY
CANNOCK GATES
AT FACTORY PRICES

Order direct from the UK's leading gate manufacturer's catalogue

Wooden Gates from only £79.95

CALL NOW ON 01543 462500
FAX 01543 506237

Quoting Dept., 112897, for your FREE Cannock Gates pack. Our phone lines are open 24 hours a day.

or write to Cannock Gates Ltd., (Dept. 112897), Marlborough, Wiltshire, Gwent, Cannock, Staffs., WS11 2KT.

The Gateway to Great Garden Ideas

CRAFTSMAN BUILT: DIRECT FROM THE FACTORY

TRAD' VALUES
AND ALL THAT JAZZ

It's quality and affordability you're after look no further. Buy your new suite direct from Britain's top manufacturer and you are guaranteed the best of both worlds. We provide the finest materials, widest choice and best value. Our Brochure contains the outstanding range of fabric and leather sofas and suites. You decide in your own home - we guarantee our quality and make a 21 day refund promise. Phone or send for a copy today

Tel: 01555 725 111

CLASSIC CHOICE

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
POST CODE _____ TEL _____

Classic Choice, Dept 701 127 Brynmawr, Bridgend, Glamorgan, CF32 9TD

AGE Concern

Wear the Aid-Call button and, if you should have an accident, press it to summon immediate assistance. It could be YOUR life saver.

FREEPHONE 0800 772266

Awnings, Canopies & Conservatory Blinds

CALL US NOW
0445 023980
FOR HELPFUL FRIENDLY SERVICE AND ADVICE

widest range of styles available
INTEREST-FREE OPTION AVAILABLE

written details upon request
Selects Canopies on a wide range of Awnings, Canopies, Free-standing units and Pergolas, Picnics, Venetian and Venetian Conservatory Blinds.

Torch & Country Awnings
116-120 WEEK STREET MAIDSTONE
KENT ME14 1RH

July 12 1997

WEEKEND • SATURDAY JULY 12 1997

property • 7

Alex O'Connell marvels at minimalist principles used to create maximum effect

Urban living stripped bare

There are two types of people: those who wash up before they've even finished eating and hang up their clothes as they peel them off, and those who allow dishes to pile Empire State high and carpet their floor with the latest ready-to-wear collection. Minimalist housing is made for the former and the accurately titled, modernist home for the latter. The Building (just try asking for directions in the local fish'n'chip shop) has been built for the sort who iron their boxer shorts, label their drawers and would like to Detox the world.

"Minimal, luminous with a Zen-like quality" is not a phrase I'd use to describe southeast London, let alone Deptford High Street. So it is fair to say that award-winning architect Mark Guard's two-storey, two-bedroom minimalist design (originally a 19th-century coach house) is an unusual find. Reached down a cobbled side street, wedged in between a modern estate and in sight of Thomas Archer's St Paul's church, it is a tribute to form and function.

Potential buyers should probably not take their grandparents to view. Guard's team specialise in the development of an "elegant, functional, modern aesthetic". So the floors are a mixture of concrete and linoleum and the gravelly courtyard and roof terrace owe

Light and stark, the master bedroom has been used for futuristic fashion shoots and a pop videos. A shower and lavatory hide behind a screen

This is the sort of place where The Man Who Fell to Earth might have felt at home their ambience to a particular municipal car park I know. Having said that, when the church bells chime and the sun sets in the early evening, the shadows on the white walls reminded me of Bruce Chatwin's photos of Morocco. This is the sort of place where the pale, well-coiffured David Bowie in The Man Who Fell to Earth might finally have felt at home.

It is a topsy-turvy house: on the ground floor there are two bedrooms and a bathroom. Although the second bedroom and bathroom are smallish, the master bedroom is light and stark — little wonder it has been used for futuristic fashion shoots and pop videos. The owners have a bed so big you could play human noughts and crosses in it and still get a good night's sleep.

Earlier in the year, the sheets were ruffled by the pop-star Peter Andre, who used the house as backdrop for his I Feel Your Love video. So tamed boys there are, but tall-boys and chests of drawers are nowhere to be found. The shower and stainless steel lavatory behind the bed are the only other solid objects in the "space".

The shower is so powerful it could scrub up a tar-coated Vietnamese porcelaine pig in a mo, although it has no doors (a trait of minimalist architecture), so the bashful should learn to whistle or enl on an "improve your self-image" weekend.

But why go away when you can clear your head across the courtyard in the "shiatsu" room? Climb onto the futon and listen to the sound of silence (bar a few lorries chugging down the high street). The spiritually challenged should buy a long table and turn it into a dining room. The courtyard itself is surrounded by a four-metre high wall: silver birches and Scots pines grow in between, the

Sliding glass panels in the living area let you look out over the courtyard and forget you're in a south London side street

HOUSE OF THE WEEK
The Building, Mary Anne Gardens, London SE8
● Price: £300,000
● Shopping: secondhand kitch and soly vegetables at Deptford market, excellent tailor on Deptford High Street (he makes all of Vic's Bob's suits), Greenwich market for vintage clothing and ethnic tat.
● Entertainment: pubs aplenty, Greenwich for the maritime enthusiast, gigs at the nearby Albany Empire
● Travel: ten minutes' walk to Greenwich town centre, two minutes to Deptford BR station with services to London Bridge, Charing Cross and Cannon Street (journey 7-15 minutes).

Kitchen in glass and steel

FOR SALE SCHOOLHOUSES

CAMBRIDGESHIRE
The School House, Chippenham, near Newmarket. Grade II* listed Queen Anne converted former schoolhouse in an outstanding 0.79 acre garden with views over Chippenham Park. Four bedrooms, two bathrooms, drawing room, dining room, kitchen/breakfast room, utility, cloakrooms and vaulted cellars. Summerhouse and alpine house. About £295,000 (bids welcome). 01223 841842.

NORTH YORKSHIRE
The Old School House, Middleham. Large Grade II listed Victorian former school house, currently a residential care centre, bookshop and tea room comprising 17 rooms (many facing Middleham Castle), bell tower, former school playground, rose beds and outbuildings. About £240,000 (bids welcome). 0183 348 1234.

BERKSHIRE
Barrow Deep, Easingbury, Hungerford. Charming Grade II listed former headmaster's house attached to the old village school house, with an extensive mature garden. Three bedrooms, bathroom, sitting room, dining room and kitchen. Duplex. About £370,000 (bids welcome). 01488 888001. CHERYL TAYLOR

SELLING POINTS SHEDS

GARDEN STORE, tool room, workshop, den, doghouse, apple store, hobby house, garden room... the shed, for all its size, is a richly versatile building. Ask George Shields, Eastwick, who showed off his motorised shed on wheels, capable of doing 55mph. The stationary version may look humble and plain, but it is an asset well worth acquiring.

A shed can be tucked away discreetly in a corner, or it can enhance the garden by filling an awkward, ugly space. Essential requirements are a flat, hard surface and enough space to open the door. Unless you are keen on DIY or have fussy specifications, there is little point in building your own. DIY and garden centres stock a range of wooden, flat-pack, self-assembly sheds which will work out cheaper if you consider the savings on your time. The smallest of the 4ft sheds start at about £120.

Before buying, consider the uses for the shed to help define style, size, and door and window configurations.

THE GROUND should be level, firm and watertight. Although self-assembly sheds come ready treated, apply more preservative to the underside of the floor before laying it. Most sheds come unlined, so consider adding insulation. And check that your insurance will cover items in an outdoor building. Now comes the fun part: customising it. All those happy hours to be spent

HELEN PICKLES

WILTSHIRE

A weekly look at the property market around Britain

Attractions: Stonehenge, Avebury, the West Kennet Long Barrow and Salisbury, the rolling countryside of the Salisbury Plain and the downs... Wiltshire is a haven for historians and rural aficionados alike. Commuters are lured by fast train services from towns like Pewsey, while second-home owners appreciate its good road links, including the A303, with the M4 to the north. Sought after areas include the Pewsey Vale and Marlborough Downs, and villages such as Easton Royal and Bishops Cleeve, according to Humberts in Pewsey. The market is definitely hot, with agents quoting rises of between 10 and 20 per cent in the past year. Drewett Neate in Marlborough has 40 properties on its books in the Marlborough area and 800 applicants, and reckons shortage of stock is fuelling rises. Many deals end up as sealed bids or best and final offers, according to John D. Wood. The market fell by up to 40 per cent between 1989 and 1992, says Strutt & Parker in Salisbury. Prices began to rise in mid-1995, and are now above peak 1988 prices for good country houses.

Expect to pay: £155,000 to £180,000 for a three-bedroom cottage; £350,000 to £400,000 for a farmhouse with two acres and £600,000-plus for a medium-size country house, according to Savills in Salisbury. Savills reckons you will pay 15 per cent extra for properties in the Nadder Valley, and 10 per cent extra for those within a few miles of the M4 and A303. Around three quarters of sales are to Londoners, many looking for second homes, says Strutt & Parker. Significant sales: Drewett Neate was swamped with calls after the Old Rectory, in Great Cheverell, south of Devizes, appeared in Country Life. Three weeks and 58 viewers later, the house, priced at £500,000, went to best and final offers, and sold for closer to £600,000. Outlook: good, says Savills, which expects the county to hold its own over the next few months, while Humberts reckons demand will continue to outstrip supply even if 20 per cent more properties come on to the market.

AMANDA LOOSE
Next Saturday's property profile: Lincolnshire

July 3rd to July 15th

Sale

ROCHE BOBOIS PARIS

WE WILL BE OPEN ON SUNDAYS DURING THE SALE
421 425 TROUBLE ROAD HAMPSHIRE LONDON W14 4NS
TEL: 0171 401 14 11 FAX: 0171 401 14 12
E-MAIL: 200@BOBOIS.PARIS WWW.BOBOIS.PARIS.CO.UK

How to avoid that sinking feeling

Homes by the sea may seem romantic but they can be fraught with hazards, says Emma Houghton

Last November, East Yorkshire County Council arrived at Sue Earle's three-bedroom Victorian farmhouse, took a few measurements, then gave her four days to leave and ordered her to demolish her home. The house, a mile south of Mableton on the Holderness coast, was just four metres from the cliff edge, and considered too dangerous to inhabit.

Ms Earle, who now lives in a caravan, is suing for compensation. She believes that sea defences built in 1991 to protect Mableton increased the rate of erosion on her land from a couple of metres a year to six or seven.

"They built two rock groynes at Mableton. This stops sediment coming onto the beach, so the cliff erodes faster because there is no beach to protect it," she says. "In one place we lost 20 metres in one year. I knew I'd lose the house eventually, but if the rate of erosion had stayed as it was, we would have had another ten to 15 years. I feel very angry. Nobody should lose their home to the sea and get nothing." She says it will cost her at least £50,000 to build a new house.

At least Ms Earle always knew her home was in danger and has some chance of compensation. Others, seduced by romantic prospects of a home by the sea, pay a premium for the privilege only to find it turn into a liability when their houses are threatened by erosion or flooding, or they have to pay high maintenance bills to keep out the rigours of salt and sea, with window frames and doors requiring constant attention.

"Some people put their life savings into a seaside bungalow and lose everything," says Chris Matthews, design engineer for East Yorkshire, which has the fastest eroding coastline in Europe: a recent report suggested the council should simply allow some villages to disappear into the sea.

"We hear stories where people have been told that the house they are buying 50 metres from the edge will last 1,000 years, but ten years down the line their front door is right on the cliff top." Problems with coastal homes are not isolated to East Yorkshire. According to Diane Dumashie, a chartered surveyor specialising in coastal development, Britain is tilting along a line running roughly from Norfolk and the Wash to Bristol, with everything to the north rising slightly, and everything to the south falling. "It's a very small drop," she says, "but it is occurring."

The encroaching coastline, in 1994 (above) and in 1972 (below)

Small it may be, but add in the increased number of storms over the past ten years and the forecast 40cm rise in sea levels around Britain over the next 50 years, and you have a significant problem, says Dr Andrew Dlugolecki, a general manager of insurers General Accident and an authority on global warming. "The slight rise in the land will cancel out sea level rises in northerly areas such as Scotland, but in the South East it will be doubly worse because the land is sinking and the sea level is rising," he says. "Severe storms can raise the sea level even higher than 40cm above its normal height for short periods, with terrible results."

The northeast coast of England, however, is especially vulnerable, largely due to its particular rock formation. Other areas most at risk are those on the coast of Kent, East Anglia, the South East, and around the Thames Wash, including homes beside tidal rivers.

Unfortunately, homeowners may find little help is at hand if the worst does happen. With storms, flooding and water damage accounting for nearly a third of all claims in England, according to a NatWest Insurance Services report, insurers are increasingly reluctant to insure homes in high-risk areas, especially if the property has a history of claims. And if the problem is coastal erosion, you are unlikely to be covered at all.

"The insurance industry is spending a lot of money and time trying to make sure it can still cover people in high-risk areas," Mr Dlugolecki says, "but it does depend how much the Government and coastal authorities are prepared to invest in ensuring these coastlines are defended."

Just how much will be spent on coastal defence is also a headache for Vivienne Jolliffe and her partner John Parker, who live in one of three former Admiralty cottages perched on the cliff edge in the hamlet of Seatown, on the Dorset coast. Their view of the sea, framed by cliffs and the imposing peak of Golden Cap, is magnificent, and from the living room you can hear the sea sighing and rolling.

Down and out: Sue Earle in the ruins of her cliff-top farmhouse, for which she is seeking compensation

But how much longer they can enjoy it all has hung in the balance since a large piece of their garden fell away three years ago, leaving the cliff edge just five metres from the house. Their fate now rests in the hands of West Dorset District Council and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF). Unless MAFF grants the council the £300,000 needed to provide sea defences, the owners may be forced to abandon their homes, each worth more than £100,000 — and they would not be eligible for compensation. Others, however, have no prospect at all of a coastal cavalry coming to the rescue. "There is the expectation that if something goes wrong, somebody will do something about it," says John Ribey, principal engineer at Scarborough Borough Council, where four years ago a hotel slipped off the cliffs of the North Yorkshire town. "A lot of people think there is an authority they can turn to if things go wrong, but there isn't. Coastal councils have a responsibility to look at coastal protection, but no obligation to put right any problems."

MAFF, which provides grants for sea defence (this includes measures such as sea walls or cliff drainage, to lower the water table), demands that the cost of any work is less than the value of any property or assets it will save, and that any scheme will not have a detrimental environmental impact. "There is now a presumption to let nature take its course rather than embark on hard engineering," Mr Ribey says. "If you protect the area concerned, it may have an adverse effect on another area down the coast."

Even if your home is protected by established sea defences, you should not be complacent. With many defences more than 100 years old and built at a lower level than anyone imagined would be overcome, it is likely they will be breached with increasing frequency over the coming years.

So what should homebuyers do to protect themselves from making a purchase they might live to regret? If you are going to buy a property in a high-risk area, get a full structural survey from a qualified local surveyor. Ms Dumashie says, and be prepared to bring in a specialist surveyor if necessary.

She also suggests you do some homework of your own. The local Environment Agency office will have plans for coastal defence and flood control, while the council engineering department should have details of local erosion rates over a number of years.

In addition, it is wise to check whether you will be able to get sufficient building and contents insurance. According to David Lervan, head of retail insurance at NatWest Insurance Services, many insurers will negotiate tailor-made policies which may, for instance, exclude damage by flooding, in which case it may come down to taking a calculated risk. "Lots of people live in flood areas but they're prepared for the worst," he says. "They have stone floors and rugs rather than expensive fitted carpets, and they stick to furniture they can move easily in a flood."

This may be fine for the stout-hearted, but is unlikely to offer much peace of mind to anyone who has read Mill on the Floss.

JOHN D WOOD & CO

LONDON AND COUNTRY ESTATE AGENTS ESTABLISHED 1872

ST. JOHN'S WOOD, NW6. Freehold. Price Guide: £725,000
An impressive and unmodernised house currently arranged as 2 self-contained flats. 5 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, 2 shower rooms, 4 reception rooms, kitchen, utility room, garage, off street parking and garden.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD: 0171-722 5556

WEST PUTNEY, SW15.

An immaculately modernised and refurbished period house in a sought after location. 6 bedrooms, 3 bathrooms, 2 reception rooms, conservatory/family room, kitchen, cellar/utility room, off street parking and 23m (75') garden.

Freehold
Price Guide: £875,000

WIMBLEDON: 0181-944 7172

KENSINGTON CHURCH STREET, W8. Freehold share. Price Guide: £485,000
A maisonette on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd floors with a roof terrace. 4 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, reception room, kitchen, utility room and 2 cloakrooms.

KENSINGTON: 0171-722 0705
J.S.A. CHESTERKTONS RESIDENTIAL 0171-937 7244

SURREY, Headley.
An exceptional house, recently refurbished, enjoying distant southern views. 6 bedrooms, 3 dressing rooms, 3 bathrooms, 2 shower rooms, 4 reception rooms, office suite, double garage, garden, tennis court, stable yard and paddocks. About 5.76 ha (14.25 acres).
HEAD OFFICE: 0171-493 4106 J.S.A. SAVILLS 0171-499 8644

LONDON OFFICES

BAITERSSEA: 0171-228 0174
BELGRAVIA: 0171-730 9854
CHELSEA: 0171-852 1484
FULHAM: 0171-731 4223
KENSINGTON: 0171-727 0705
MAYFAIR: 0171-408 0055
ST JOHN'S WOOD: 0171-722 5556
WANDSWORTH: 0181-871 3033
WIMBLEDON: 0181-944 7172

COUNTRY OFFICES

HEAD OFFICE: 0171-493 4106
CIRENCESTER: 01285 642244
EAST GRINSTEAD: 01342 326926
FARNHAM: 01252 737115
LYMINGTON: 01590 677233
NEWBURY: 01635 523225
OXFORD: 01865 311522
WINCHESTER: 01962 863131
HONG KONG: 00 852 2 872 5146

26 CURZON STREET, LONDON W1P 8LD
0171-493 4106 FAX: 0171-629 6071

LETTINGS AND MANAGEMENT

To let your house or flat Central London 0171-491 4311
North London 0171-722 3336 Wimbledon & Surrey 0181-946 9447
South of the M4 01256 398004 North of the M4 01865 311522

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, Ludgershall. Price Guide: £165,000
An attractive and unique listed thatched 'Hovel' cottage with Medieval origins. 2 bedrooms, bathroom, reception room, kitchen, summerhouse and gardens. About 0.2 ha (0.5 acres).
OXFORD: 01865 311522

BERKSHIRE, Wokingham. Price Guide: £315,000
A fine house in a secluded and sought after position on a private road. 5 bedrooms, 3 bathrooms, 2 reception rooms, study, kitchen, utility room, double garage and gardens.
EARNHAM: 01252 737115

BURY STREET, SW1.

A newly refurbished period house, arranged over 4 floors, with a first floor drawing room, 3 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, 2 reception rooms, 2 cloakrooms, kitchen and garden.

Lease to 2095
Price Guide: £750,000

BELGRAVIA: 0171-730 9854

THAMES REACH, W6. Lease to 2983. Price Guide: £435,000
Beautifully arranged 2nd floor flat with stunning views over the Thames. 2 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, reception room, large roof terrace, porter, parking and lift.
FULHAM: 0171-731 4223

Ronald Faux on why County
Mayo attracts a very different kind of marcher

No one is interested in your title, rank or religion, your class or your creed. We are plain and simple people who enjoy walking and feel it does us good," says Ernie Sweeney, a founder-walker of the Castlesbar event. "I would invite everyone from both sides of the divide in Drumree to come to Castlesbar, swap stories, share their sandwiches, help each other with their blistered feet and get to know one another. That has always been

A contingent from the Dutch army and air force led the opening parade, marching through the damp streets of Castlebar behind the town band playing the Stars and Stripes. The stream of walkers carried the flags of a dozen or more nations. The town was decked out with bunting and shop-window displays welcomed the walkers. The Chamber of Trade was convinced that Castlebar had been put on the international map by its Englishmen have over the years been counted among the walkers. "The whole essence of this gathering is good companionship," one of the organisers says. "We have no time for tribal attitudes. It's ironic that the marches here and in Drumcree should take place on the same day, for such very different reasons and with such opposite results."

The walks began not for altruistic reasons but simply to lift the town's image and tourist industry.

"Events like those are supermarket marches; we prefer to think of ourselves as the corner shop. I would be hard for Castletar to absorb such numbers," says Mr.
Sweeney, a year-round walker who has mastered the technique of avoiding blisters by covering his toes with Vaseline, dousing his socks with baby powder and embracing the pain.

The pattern is for the rambler to lead to set the pace and for everyone to follow with occasional stops for cold drinks, lunch and for stragglers to catch up. Walk cars are punched by officials at intervals along the way and the correct

The walkers were a cheerful, gregarious crowd with as strong a sense of community and purpose as

As Drumcree and Northern Ireland began clearing up an aftermath of broken glass, burned vehicles and battered hopes, Castbar marchers prepared for grand finale — the Blister Ball, which most strode and just a limped. Elaine Devereux, the head of ceremonies, was happy with way things had gone this year.

She asked: "Could you please then know there is some good news from over here?"

A Rescue cats (and dogs) arrive complete with all their virtues and vices. Your cat could have been taken to the rescue home because he clawed the wallpaper in his previous home. Reformation is possible, but if he has been a sinner for a long time, re-education will take a while. Saying "no" is not likely to help. A water pistol is more effective. Repeated and unex-

● Write to The Times Vet.
Weekend, The Times,
1 Pennington Street, London E1 4XN. Advice is offered without legal responsibility.

OR SEND FOR INFORMATION LEAFLET
Cheque PO to: MINI-VT MARKETING
East Avenue, Green Lane, Coventry, W. Midlands CV3 5BT
Tel/FAX: 01203 416193

10

... ..

'After the election, I even detected a faint whiff of machismo among some of the men about not how little but how much they cried'

Welcome to the nation of blubbers

OUR YOUNGER son has a joke — his first and only joke, in fact, and as such he likes to tell it every day, several times a day, if at all possible. I, too, thought it was hilarious the first time because, with his parody of uncouth concern and faintly lascivious eye-rolling, he bore an uncanny and mercifully fleeting resemblance to Bob Monkhouse.

"Knock knock. Mmmmm," he says, in that peculiarly commanding way six-year-olds have. "Who's there, darling?" "Boo," his lips already curling with anticipation. "Boo who?" "Don't cry, it's only a joke." At which both sons clutch their sides and crouch up with laughter.

They are still at the age where it is just about acceptable for boys to boo-hoo in the playground without being ostracised by their peer group. The older one, who is currently obsessed with defining what is and isn't "cool", knows that blubbing is in the second category, but since his school is not one of those establishments where a boy who cries is harangued by others for being "a weed, a wet and a git", tears are not yet something which have to be suppressed at all costs.

I wonder whether we may be turning into a nation of blubbers. I was out of the country for the election, but came back to find that the most pressing question in even the most hard-nosed left-leaning circles was "So at what point in the evening did you cry?" There were the sentimentalists who became moist-eyed when Tony Blair, with a catch in his voice, talked about his mother not being alive to share his happiness, and the Tory-haters' tears of joy when Pöhl lost his seat. No one seemed to find it in the least bit embarrassing or inappropriate that his or her response to the end of 18 years of Conservative rule was to weep. Indeed, I even detected a faint whiff of machismo among some of the men about not how little but how much they cried. Only the children found the idea of grown-ups boo-hooing — particularly about something as boring as politics — absurd.

"Dad, are you really saying that Tony Blair made you cry?" was the nine-year-old's response, followed by his favourite exasperating insult, "Shame!"

I must say that I still find it disconcerting myself when grown-ups cry. The sight of old men weeping is particularly affecting. At the memorial service I attended recently, I was surrounded by crusty old fellows, sticks by their side, tears coursing down their furrowed cheeks, and it made me feel quite overcome knowing that decades of conditioning were being overturned in that public expression of their sorrow.

LIFE AND SOUL

GINNY DOUGARY

I can still hear the terrible sound of my father crying. It was so profoundly shocking — in that small moment turning my whole child's world topsy-turvy — that I can, without any difficulty other than a sense, still, of confusion and inarticulate fear, see myself then, hearing a howl like the cry of an animal in pain, rise from my bed, clutching my raggedy teddy, walk down the dimly lit corridor to my parents' bedroom and whisper, "What's the matter?"

Since the birth of our children, my husband has become a serial blubber. Their arrival has unlocked all the emotion that was sealed up with a padlock when he was eight or so — younger, at least, than our older son is now — and it became apparent that boys don't cry. He cried, of course, when they were born, and during their first nativity plays, and whenever the older one performs something beautiful on the piano, and he is bound to blow his nose loudly when he sees the younger one in his wellies and sou'wester singing in the Rain with all the other Year 1 Gene Kellys in his class assembly next week.

When our nine-year-old son was still a breastfeeding baby, my husband read Alexander Stuart's account of his young son's death from leukaemia and could not stop crying. Since then, he has refused to read anything which involves children and pain. The act of having children has turned him into an Everydad: every child who suffers is his child; every father who loses a son is him.

The other day, while invigilating an undergraduate exam, he happened to read an article about children leaving home as young adults. One father had given up watching football on television because it made him miss his son so much. In front of 35 students, my husband was horrified to discover that his cheeks were wet.

My tears are cheap. I have even cried watching an episode of Charlie's Angels. My whole life is an exercise in catharsis. Last weekend, I wept buckets watching Ian Holm's brave, naked Lear, and then I wept some more in The Railway Children — especially the bit at the end when Jenny Agutter in those great black stockings and frothy white petticoats runs down the station wailing "It's — [gulp] my Daddy!" When I asked the six-year-old if he was okay, he said: "I'm not crying. I've just got water in my eyes."

Why changing a plug proved I could cope

My father died five years ago, and his death left my mother bereft. Not only had he been her loving partner and best friend, he'd also been the one who looked after the bank accounts, paid the bills and made sure everything was insured. There was very much the traditional "husband and wife" partnership, where she looked after the home and the children, and he earned the money and looked after all the financial aspects of their lives.

They had very clearly divided roles, and when he died very suddenly from a stroke, it was as if the rug had been pulled from under her feet. Not only did she have to cope with the grief of his death, but also the realisation that everything he'd taken care of was now her responsibility — and she had no idea how the system worked.

In the early days of their marriage he even filled her car with petrol for her. I remember once she was furious because she'd set out for the luncheon club, all dressed up, and was absolutely livid to find she'd been left without petrol. She couldn't simply go and get some — because she had no money. My dad looked after all that.

After his death we all helped as much as we could, and she relied very heavily on the partners at my father's accountancy firm. But after a while this reliance on others began to annoy us. We'd say: "Sort it out yourself, Mum. Insuring a house isn't that difficult, honestly."

Taking on tasks done by a partner can help the bereaved to deal with the future. Diana Appleyard reports the 'manly' responsibilities — earning the money, paying the bills. Now I think those roles are much more blurred with more sharing of responsibilities, and often it's the woman who'll handle the money.

"But in almost every relationship each partner does have set tasks," she says. "The woman will know how the washing-machine works — the man will know how to work the mower. Often it is still the man who'll do all the practical things around the house — changing plugs, basic DIY."

When one partner dies, taking on these responsibilities can seem incredibly daunting, often impossible.

What we suggest is rely on someone else initially to help you — your solicitor, your accountant, friends and family — but then it is important you start to take charge. It is after all going to become part of your new life.

Joyce Hyams's husband John died suddenly two years ago from a heart attack. At the time they were living in Spain, running a business together. "He died sitting at home eating a meal. It was a terrible shock, and it took me quite a while to even accept what had happened," she says.

"We did everything together — shopping, working, cooking, seeing friends. He was a very practical person, and there were lots of things he wouldn't let me do. I did pay cheques into the bank account, but he looked after all the insurance — everything. I never even had to think about writing a letter. He did all that. If a plug went — he changed it. He wouldn't have dreamt of letting me do it."

After he died Joyce returned to England, where her two daughters, Maureen and Gill, live. "When I got back I relied very heavily on them, and they did everything for me. My former son-in-law sorted out all my paperwork, and in a way I was letting them run my life, like John had done."

But after a while her family rebelled. Joyce says: "I had been leaving everything to Gill, and I could sense she was stepping back. It took me a while to realise why."

Gill says: "I could see that she wasn't going to learn to cope on her own. I said, 'OK, Mum, I'll sort it out'. So we all employed a bit of tough love. We said, 'No, Mum, you do it. You're perfectly capable of paying your insurance or whatever.' I saw that things which in real life — such as losing a credit card — would be a bit of a problem, were becoming the end of the world for her. So we had to step back to make her cope."

Ms Hilliard says: "This is very common. When someone dies suddenly, you are completely fazed. Even people who were formerly real 'copers' go to pieces. What you have to realise is that this is a reaction to what's happened. People are very shocked and frightened, and what they do is transfer all the anxieties and fears about the bereavement onto their small problems, and create a drama. It's also a good way of getting attention if you're feeling lonely."

"What you have to do is separate the feelings. Recognise you're bereaved — not because of this problem. Then deal with it as calmly as you can."

Alison Parks's husband Steven died recently at the age of 35, leaving her with two children under four. Not only did she have his death to contend with, but her mortgage company also refused to pay off the debt because he had suffered from depression, which they claimed hadn't been referred to on his life assurance policy.

"It has been a horrendous time," she says. "Money is the biggest worry, and also looking after the children. I can't get a job because I need to care for them. If it wasn't for my Mum and Dad I don't know what I'd do."

She has relied on them heavily since Steven's death. But that has had its price. "My mother is driving me mad," Alison says. "They feel they really have to look after me, but I feel they're treating me as a child. My mother thinks I don't know how to do things, and she sends my father over to do them for me."

Alison is also missing Steven in lots of little ways. "The video broke recently, and I was left sitting in the middle of the living room floor surrounded by all these wires. Steven knew how it worked. Then the garage roof leaked, and everything got soaking wet. That night I sat and cried, because I had no idea who to phone to fix it. Also there's no one to tell when things go wrong — I just can't pick up the phone and say, 'Steven, help!' So I panic."

But gradually she feels she is becoming more in control. "I sanded all the skirting boards in the living room, and to be honest they look awful, but at least I did it."

Joyce too feels she's beginning to take on the jobs that before fell to John. "The first time I changed a plug, I switched it on with a broom handle because I was convinced I was going to blow myself up. But now I'm putting up shelves and doing a bit of varnishing, and I feel really proud of myself."

Ms Hilliard says: "Once you do start taking over your former partner's responsibilities there is a real sense of achievement, and it all helps to build up your confidence. You can think 'My husband would be so proud of me'. Even doing little things like mowing the lawn or changing a plug means you're incorporating what they did as part of your current life, and it can make you feel very close to them."

"Many people become more confident than they were before the death of their partner. Lots of people say to me, 'I'm doing things I never thought I'd do'. The death of someone very close means many changes, but some people emerge stronger and more confident than before."

My mother now has a very full, interesting life. She's taken up activities my father would have had no time for, but which she enjoys. She's mastered the art of insurance, and getting the car serviced. I'm just waiting for her to take up hang-gliding."

Joyce Hyams found that learning how to sort out her paperwork helped her to cope following her husband's death

Ruth Gledhill enjoys the peace of a near-empty church that drew 18th-century Bloomsbury's great and good

An oasis of quiet in the city centre

SELFISHLY speaking, there can be few things more enjoyable than Prayer Book evensong in a near-empty church. Maybe it was growing up in the countryside, with no one but our family, the organist's daughters and the farmer's wife in the congregation — and dusty prayer black books that urged us still to pray for King George — that did the damage, but worship at St George's in Bloomsbury felt strangely like coming home.

One difference was the noise. Central London was eerily quiet on a Sunday, while hymns in the countryside seemed always to be accompanied by the unstoppable sounds of dogs, cows and sheep on neighbouring farms. But strangely, in this parish of thousands, there were even fewer people at church than there used to be in our home church, which served a parish of about 35.

As in all empty churches, the three worshippers gravitated towards the back. The organist played exquisitely in the gallery of this blissful church, while the church warden sat alone, near the front. A couple of tourists wandered in, and stayed, halfway through.

True it was that the two elderly ladies behind me and I had the undivided attention of the priest, Fr Perry Butler, who is also director of ordination in the Edmonton area, and religious adviser to London Weekend Television. "The theme that links the readings on this second Sunday in Pentecost is a more excellent way to love," he said.

The second-best bit was the hymns. For someone with a loud but sadly out-of-tune voice, this was the perfect place to let go. The ladies at behind suffered uncomplainingly through the Magnificat, the Nunc Dimittis and Lord of all hopefulness, Lord of all joy.

But the best bit of all was the priest who, instead of preaching, read George Herbert's poem, Love. "You must love the alien for you once lived as alien in Egypt," we heard in the first reading, from Deuteronomy. "Love the Lord your God with all your heart, all your mind and all your strength," we heard in the second, from Mark. "Let the greatness of your love be known to us that we may worship with the wonder of joy," we prayed. Before the service, there had been a recital, with Lucy Wilnot on the violin and Lydia Clatworthy on the piano performing works by Schubert, Fauré and Elgar. For this, the church was nearly full. This was the first of 12 Sunday afternoon recitals at St George's, and was a perfect prelude to evensong. But these people did not stay.

Lucy Wilnot, violin, and Lydia Clatworthy, piano, at St George's

In the morning the church has between 30 and 40 worshippers, when coffee and tea after the service is plentiful, and evensong has been known to go into double figures.

Once, the pews told a different story. In the 18th century, this church served the great and the good. In 1730, its vestrymen included the Duke of Montagu, Sir Robert Eyre, Lord Chief Justice, Sir Hans Sloane, the celebrated naturalist, William Hicks, the royal brewer and five baronets.

Its architecture reflects this. From the statue of King George I atop the unique steeple, based on the design of the mausoleum built in Turkey for King Mausolus himself, to the grand 18th-century south porch and the gilded winged cherubs in the east apse, the church is at once solemn and light.

Many alterations have been made. One of the saddest losses, besides that of the congregation, has been of the lions and unicorns that decorated the base of the steeple, removed a century ago. Efforts to trace them this century have failed. Fr Perry arrived at St George's in November 1995 and, although part-time, is determined to bring it back to life. Services there are renowned for intelligent preaching and a broadly catholic approach within the Anglican tradition.

As I left, I prayed that church bureaucrats concerned with bottom-line profits would not seek out this place and close it down. St George's is living proof that there is a need and purpose for the near-empty church. None can say that God is not there just because there are so few people.

St George's Church, Bloomsbury Way, London WC1 (0171-405 3049).

TRAVEL IN WEEKEND

"Like a layered fruit cake, like an oily, rich cassoulet, each town, each city of Morocco titillates, seduces, then defies you to leave."

Also this week: Australia Special and Britain's new competitor to Center Parcs

PAGES 15-21

The talking key.

The unique Navi™ Key on the new Nokia 3110 will talk your phone into doing anything you want. Call, save, send, edit, display. That's simplicity, in any language.

Call 0690 003110 for a leaflet. Or talk your retailer into a demo.

NOKIA
CONNECTING PEOPLE

3110. A TOUCH SIMPLER.

Repels fleas

NATURAL WAY

...and more...

HERALD & HEART MATTERS

STOWAWAY
HAT-IN-A-TUBE

From Herald & Heart Matters comes a hard wearing Summer hat that rolls up into its own case for easy travelling and storage.

Made from glazed "paper panama straw" this vibrant coloured hat can fold completely flat for easy storage and gift giving.

The price of the Stowaway is just £26.50 (Postmaking U.K. p.p.s).

To purchase please contact
Herald & Heart Matters
131 St Philip St
London E9R 2SS

Tel: 0171 627 2414
Fax: 0171 682 2414
e-mail: postmaster@and-heart.com.au

CUTLERY
RE-SILVERPLATING SERVICE

Will make your worn cutlery as good as new. Single items upwards. Also teapots, trays, dishes etc. Very reasonable prices. Repairs undertaken.
Nationwide service. Full details from:

C.F.L.S., Butta Cottage, Walsborough Green, Sussex
BN11 4J BN
or phone:
01403 700 424

The 'Sheila Maid'[®]

CAS PION AND MAIZONA PINE CLOTHES ARM!

Everything you need to find inside this 'Energy Saving' Arm!

48 hr Despatch

Home Delivery

Worldwide

For info

Trade Account Enquiries: UK Overseas: Direct Mail

10/17 BILBOL CAS PION PINE CLOTHES ARM!

4 PINE HAVES FINISHED BOUNDED EDGE RAILS

MAIZONA PINE CLOTHES ARM! 48 hr Despatch

CAS PION, PULLERS, CLEAR IN 6 COLOURS.

The ORIGINAL 'Casling Grey Metal Core Coated'

57-59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69

COLOURS: Casling Grey, Blue, Green, Black, White

57-59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69

POSTAGE & PACKING ADD $5

MAIZONA PINE CLOTHES ARM!

THE DOMESTIC PARAPHARMACIA Co. Dept 1

Unit 15, Marine Business Centre, Dock Rd.

Lymington, Lincs NYS 54L, England

01534 721111 01534 721112 01534 721113

MORIARTY'S SOLID PINE
STORAGE BEDS

For NEW colour brochure
PHONE
(01233) 850214

Hand tailored Plus Twos and Trousers for Gentlemen

From $39.95

*Choice from mokinix, tortois card, flannel,
tweed and golf checks*

- Made to measure
service available
- Ideal for golf and country wear

Call 0113 248 8160 for your FREE
brochure.

A SHIRT by

However
Faded or Torn,
Your old Eiderdown can be re-made as new

EIDERDOWNS
RE-COVERED
Also DUVETS RECOVERED.
and NEW FEATHER EIDERDOWNS
Please send stamp for patterns.
Kings of Clackton Ltd, Dept FIC 446
132 Old Road, Clackton-on-Sea, Essex
CO15 3AJ TEL: 01255 432518

The Easybathe...

for those with special needs

- A deep soaking bath which allows easy access.
- Integral seat complete with contoured backrest.
- Complete installation service & free advice line.
- Wide range of colours.

Premier
BATHROOMS

Ring today on 0800 018 0088

THE LADYS
NORFOLK HAT

At last! A beautiful 100% cotton, light, cool and crisp lady's sun hat. Wide brim protects you from the sun. Folds flat to fit in a bag, washable, perfect for summer travel.

Available in Natural, Pale Pink and Pale Blue. Sizes S 54-55cm, M 56-57cm, L 58cm and XL 59cm.

For 48hr Despatch

0171 371 8998

Norfolk Hats, Unit 7,
The Talina Centre, Bagleys
Lane, London SW6 2BW
Fax 0171 371 7011

Folds for summer travel!

£23.50
Plus £1.65 p.p.h.

[illegible]

SEAMOUNTS is individually
made to measure

EXACT SLEEVE LENGTH
CORRECT BODY SIZE
CHOICE OF COLLAR SHAPES
CHOICE OF FRONT STYLES
CHOICE OF CUFF TYPES
CHOICE OF SHOULDER FIT
CHOICE OF BODY LENGTH
CHOICE OF 400 FABRICS
CHOICE OF 100 PATTERNS
FULL, STANDARD & SLIM FITS
AFTER SALES SERVICE
DEFECTIONALLY HAND CUT & SEWED
BY HAND
THE FINEST QUALITY

ALSO MADE TO MEASURE CLASSICAL LADIES SUIT
BLOUSES
WORTH THE PHONE for 400 fabric samples and our color brochure.

Seymour Shirts
EST. 1963

CANTERBURY PAPER RACK

Height	22 1/2"
Width	27"
Depth	15 1/2"

Price £149
Including delivery & VAT

Made from solid
Mahogany, Delatany No. 1
Veneers. For Magazines & Newspapers, with two drawers on the bottom. Volumes or written enquiries welcome. Large warehouse with full range of stock.
Excellent value on all furniture
9-5pm Mon-Fri. 7-1pm Sat.

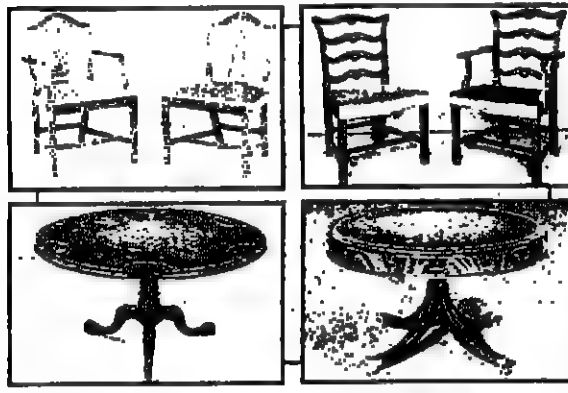

Classic Reproductions
SWAN CORMER, PENSEY
WILTS. SN9 5HE

Premier Bathrooms • FREEPOST BM4991 • Birmingham • B38 8B

Recreating the period. Perfectly.

At William Tillman our craftsmen lovingly create modern masterpieces that reproduce the finest examples of English 18th and 19th century furniture to perfection. Call now and let us introduce you to quality that cannot be surpassed anywhere.

WILLIAM TILLMAN

10% DISCOUNT UNTIL END OF AUGUST

30 St James's Street, London SW1A 1HB.
Telephone: 0171 839 2500 Fax: 0171 930 8106

14-24 Crouch Lane, Borough Green, Kent TN15 8LT
Telephone: 01732 883278 Fax: 01732 894439

 Made in UK

Please specify if you do not wish to receive details of other offers.

£10 a week...

...will rent you an Acorn Stairlift.
To find out more, call us now on freephone
0800 19 19 19

Next day installation available nationwide.
Initial payment to include 6 months min rental, installation and removal costs.
Direct from the manufacturers.
Rent or buy.

ACORN STAIRLIFTS

20% OFF

INTEREST FREE CREDIT
FREE UK DELIVERY
OFFER MUST END
31 JULY 97

Computer Desks - Desk Chairs - Filing Cabinets - Bookcases

Visit the factory and superbstore showrooms to see the world's largest display of fine English 18th Century Antique Replicas solid Mahogany, Walnut, Yew & Birdseye Maple furniture made by master craftsmen to a standard unsurpassed this century.

Mon-Sat 9am-5.30pm

BRITISH ANTIQUE REPLICAS

NIT SCHOOL CLOSE, QUEEN ELIZABETH AVE., BURGESS HILL (BETWEEN ORPHEAV & BRIGHTON) WEST SUSSEX RH15 9XK

FREE FIRE ALIKE FURNITURE and look, there starts new style thinking, new designs downstream products and best placed in the back of many, bottles, wine, black white, chrome, bronze purple, beige and natural black, color shade S 15

M 18, L 18,5, XL 17,9
M 18, L 18,5, XL 17,9

SHOPAROUND

ALSO APPEARS ON PAGE 14

24 HOUR ORDER & BROCHURE HOTLINE
01483 576277

AMERICAN EXPRESS Dept TTS14, FREEPOST,
PO Box 3422, London SE25 9BR
MasterCard 4, Cardpoint House, 28 Wilton Place, London SE25 9BR

West of England REPRODUCTION FURNITURE

AT FACTORY PRICES
IN MAHO-CANY, YEW
& OAK BOOKCASES
Break-front and Straight-front Rays 3" - 5" wide and 6" - 7" high.

CORNER CABINETS
7 different cabinet in 225
sizes from £225.

AT FACTORY PRICES

TABLES & CHAIRS
T Mahogany table with 2 Carvers and 4 Chairs from £645. Over 25 varieties of tables in every format of all sizes. Over 30 designs of chairs in traditional designs.

- Polish to your specifications to match existing furniture or kitchen, always even on lacquer.
- Brackets manufactured to fit on standard in built-in and freestanding.
- Best quality and top value.
- Widest range covering 18" - Chisel, Balmforth, Beathams, Dunlop Cabinets, TV & Hi-Fi Cabinets, occasional guests etc.
- FREE DELIVERY for orders over £2000 throughout the South of England, elsewhere by quotation

TV & HI-FI CABINETS
To suit equipment of all makes
Prices from £185

HAND-MADE OAK
A complete range of traditional break-front, Oak & Ash Dining, Refectory Tables,
Gow-Lag Tables with Windsor chairs of all designs

DESIGNS
from 7'3" to 9'4", prices from £285
(9'3" set £285)

FREE COLOUR BROCHURE & PRICE LIST

West of England Reproduction Furniture
8 Bardsell Court, Houndstone Business Park, Nodd, Somerset BA22 9HT
TEL: 01935 706351 • FAX: 01935 432238
M40 exit 25 • Byway (N26 7471) • Bristol 1078 02278 • Southampton 01404 20797

PLEASE QUOTE
T51

01483 576277

The best stairlift?

Stannah.

The world's most chosen stairlift.

0800 715 309

We Make Sofa's and Sofa Beds

See your Soas and Chairs being made by Craftsmen and Women.

Choose your Sofa or Chair and Fabric, Leave the rest to us.
Made to Measure.

Vast choice of fabrics including Brand names, Sanderson, Monkwell, Osbourne, Liberty and many others
Open 7 days.

Leasing, Contract and Interior Designers Welcome.
Re-Upholstery, Curavals and Divan sets?

Certainly!

We will beat any other price of a comparable quality

Call the FACTORY SHOP at Poststyle Ltd.
Unit 1, Bayford Street, Mare Street,
Hackney, London E8 3SE (Nr Wall St).
Tel: 0181 533 0915 Fax: 0181 955 2953

OPEN BANK HOLIDAY

MEDICUR
GUARANTEES
PAIN RELIEF
or a refund without quibble

Poetry Competition

£18,000.00 prize money to be won

The International Library of Poetry, an affiliate of the widely respected US National Library of Poetry, is sponsoring an International Open Amateur Poetry Competition. There will be a new contest each month, and each contest will award one Grand Prize of £1,000, plus ten Second Prizes of £50 each. The closing date for entry is 31st August 1997. Another competition begins on 1st September 1997. The competition is open to all and entry is free.

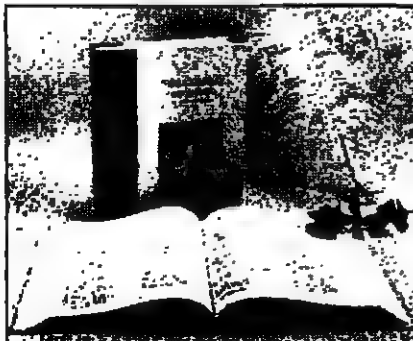

"It's always exciting to discover new talent. We have been sponsoring competitions in the United States for more than ten years now — and it's a special pleasure to be running these events in the UK," stated Howard Ely of The International Library of Poetry. "We're especially interested in receiving poems from new or unpublished poets."

How to Enter

Anyone may enter the competition simply by sending in one original poem, any subject, any style, to:

The International Library of Poetry
Dept. 9016
FREEPOST LON 2229
SITTINGBOURNE
Kent ME10 3BR
(No stamp required)

The poem should be no more than 20 lines, and the poet's name and address must appear at the top of the page. The entry must be typed or neatly handwritten and will not be returned. All poets who enter will receive a reply, along with complete competition rules, within nine weeks.

The Coming of Dawn, featured above, is one of the Library's recent delicate hardbound anthologies.

Publication Opportunity

All of the poems entered into the competition will also be considered for inclusion in one of The International Library of Poetry's forthcoming anthologies. Every poem remains the exclusive property of its author. Anthologies published by the organisation have included A Passage in Time, Voices on the Wind, The Other Side of the Mirror, Between a Laugh and a Tear and The Coming of Dawn, among others.

World's Largest Poetry Organisation

The International Library of Poetry was founded in 1987 to promote the work and achievements of contemporary poets — and is now recognised as the largest organisation of its kind in the world. In recent years it has awarded more than £60,000 in prize money to more than 5,000 poets worldwide. In the next twelve months £18,000 in prize money will be awarded in the UK alone.

The International Library of Poetry, Poets House, Chesters Road, Dolphin Park, Sittingbourne, Kent ME10 3BH

THE GENUINE PANAMA HAT COMPANY

 Hand-woven in Ecuador, the Lady's Panama Hat has a full brim, trimmed at the edge with leather. We have included a light chiffon band in a natural shade which can be removed easily should you wish to add a band of your own. Sizes: S 54-56cm, M 56-57cm, L 58cm and XL 59cm.

Please allow 7 days for delivery. Montecristi Roll-Up and Trilby styles also available.

For more details on our full range call 0171 610 9393

Or write to The Genuine Panama Hat Company, Unit 7, The Daffin Centre, Bagleys Lane, London SW6 2DQ tel 071 771 7011

You may see some details of some offers. Please specify if you do not wish to receive them.

£29.95
hat price

Dunlopillo

LATEX also

FFC

exclusive
FOAMS

FIRE RETARDANT

cut to size

for cushions & mattresses

NEW CUSHIONS
For chairs, sofas, bench seating etc. Measure up with our own fitted covers.

MATRESSES
Made to measure any size and to your individual comfort.

MATRESSES OVERLAYS
A separate 2 in. deep layer for instant relief on a too hard bed.

EVERYTHING DELIVERED SAFELY TO YOUR DOOR. (Fax: 0113 274 8102)

☎ PHONE 0113 274 8100

or post coupon for colour brochure, measuring guide and direct prices.

Please send stamp for colour brochure or phone.

Mr/Mrs/Miss _____

CAPITALS _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

FORM FOR COMFORT Dept T2,
Unit Two, Wyther Lane Industrial Estate,
Wyther Lane, Kirkstall, Leeds LS5 3BT.

FFC

Postcode _____

FORM FOR COMFORT Dept T2,
Unit Two, Wyther Lane Industrial Estate,
Wyther Lane, Kirkstall, Leeds LS5 3BT.

CASTLE COMBE
SKID PAN
Learn how to control a car in wet or icy conditions. We provide the cars and instruction. Next day course is great fun and costs £28.50

GIFT VOUCHERS MAKE EXCELLENT PRESENTS
Castle Combe Skid Pan, Castle Combe Circuit, Clipperton, Wiltshire, SN14 7BE
Tel: (01249) 782101

GENUINE BIRTHDAY NEWSPAPERS
From largest archives saved from 1642-1997, Sunday Newspapers from 1915. Ready for presentation. Same day dispatch.
REMEMBER WHEN 520 Parley Way,
Croydon, Surrey CR8 4RL 0181 688 6323
or call FREE 0500 520 000

MILES FROM Koolatron
WILL GIVE DRINK OR

The Koolatron is a lightweight plug into the cars light technology, it uses a the matchbox to deliver the switch can keep food above is large enough empty. An optional add

- ⊕ The P
- ⊕ Has a
- ⊕ 30 day
- ⊕ Free o
- ⊕ Option

To order your

Koolatron

1 Clipper Court,

Medicur

Control Magnetic Field Therapy

As used in hospitals & now available for a 60 day trial in your own home

Medicur is the UK's leading natural Magnetic Field Therapy treatment for conditions such as:

- ⊗ Back Pain
- ⊗ Headaches
- ⊗ Stiff and Swollen Joints
- ⊗ Sleeplessness
- ⊗ PMS
- ⊗ Fatigue
- ⊗ Tension and so many other conditions.

SO SIMPLE & EASY TO USE

⊗ COMPLETELY NATURAL
Brings pain & therapeutic relief... that's Guaranteed!

For further information without any obligation, please contact us at:

COMPLETELY NATURAL & THOROUGHLY EFFECTIVE
No leads or pads

MEDICUR (UK) LTD., (Dept. T12/7) , PALMER HOUSE, 11 RADCLIFFE ROAD, NOTTINGHAM NG2 5FF or telephone on 0115 814 1144

NO WHERE

WATCH

YOU A COLD

WARM FOOD

light portable fridge which sockets. Developed from space electrocyclic module the size of a cooling power of a 10lb block of ice. Or at the turn of a arm up to 125 degrees Fahrenheit. The P20 shown hold 23 12oz cans and weighs only 9lbs when or allows you to pre-cool or warm before use.

costs only £99.95
1 year warranty
no quibble* money back guarantee every in UK
adaptor costs £39.95

Koolatron, phone 0800-585294

iron* INTERNATIONAL
Midway City Estate, Rochester, Kent ME2 4QR

From reef to mountains, naturally
Australia - 16-17

THE TIMES

travel

Woodland Oasis takes on Center
Parcs
Britain - 19

Moorish memories of a glorious past

After a gap of 19 years,
Jeremy Wayne returned to Morocco to find the atmosphere of medieval mystery still unchanged

Back in 1978, when Blondie topped the album charts with Parallel Lines and students grew pot in yoghurt cartons on their windowsills, I first took the road to Morocco. With two college friends I crossed the straits from Algeiras in southern Spain late one August afternoon. At dusk the Transmediterranea ferry slipped effortlessly into Tangier harbour and we stepped gingerly on to the Dark Continent, our progress marginally impeded by the cartons of Marlboros and half-dozen pairs of Levi's we had been advised to carry in case we got into a scrape.

I had brought a guidebook along, too, written by a lady whose name, appropriately, was Jane Holliday, who described the old fishing port as "a gay symphony of colour", a description uncannily apt as we found ourselves accosted a dozen or more times by wanton boys before reaching the harbour gates.

Nineteen years later I returned, without room-mates or rucksacks or American cigarettes, an American wife instead, with a suitcase in her wake and a fondness for good hotels. Would Morocco be the same? We would follow the same route, visit the same sites and, since this is a true story, only the hotels would be changed to protect the spoils.

We sailed from Algeiras again. From the upper deck of the Ibn Battuta only a heart of stone would fail to be moved by the first glimpse of Tangier, Africa's northern outpost, a patchwork of crumbling plaster which tumbles from hilltops down the slopes into Jane Holliday's gay harbour below.

Between 1912 and 1956 Tangier was an international city, and until well into the 1970s poets, pederasts, aristocrats and the dispossessed came here to find each other and, occasionally, themselves. In its heyday it was the most licentious city on the planet, teeming with boy brothels, pornographic cinemas and drug dens. Paul Bowles, William Burroughs, Allen Ginsberg, Joe Orton — all gravitated here for their art and their pleasure, and Bowles remains here, a twinkly-eyed octogenarian living in unseemly splendor in a faceless apartment building opposite the defunct American consulate.

Each evening the Pension Marrakech in the medina where I had hoped up last time around (great location, Art Deco reception desk, clean-ish sheets and cold running water, a bargain in anyone's book with doubles at £150 a night), we used El Minzhal, a twinkle-eyed octogenarian living in unseemly splendor in a faceless apartment building opposite the defunct American consulate.

We spent the mornings enjoying Tangier's warming winter sun and the afternoons wandering the alleys of the old town looking for what once had been. Barbara Hutton's house, Sidi Hosni, now divided ignobly into four apartments, dominates the casbah. Her excesses are well documented in the city over which she reigned as uncrowned queen, her influence so great that in 1958 the mayor of Tangier ordered that all existing arches in the city be widened so that her Rolls-Royces might glide more easily through them.

Tangier is now the most unattractive resort in Morocco, which makes it a serious traveller's dream. Since the 1970s, most of its infamous watering-holes, such as the flamenco estaminet La Mar Chica and the populist Paradise, have closed down, but some of the haunts frequented by Hutton, beau monde king David Herbert and later the Beats, still survive.

We drank beer at noon in Dean's Bar, a filthy hole-in-the-wall where the beau monde once went slumming and where nowadays Spanish dock workers crowd the bar, expectant and expectorating, to watch football on satellite television. In the cafes on the Place de France, the central point of the city, where rich man, poor man, beggar man and thief congregate, we sipped mint tea sans sucre and watched the shadows lengthen. Much later, in the hours after midnight, we knocked back injudicious shots of cheap brandy at the Tangier Inn, a deliciously unwholesome, louche dive sporting Ginsberg's annotated photographs on the walls and adjoining which, in a ground floor room of the Hotel Mourira, Burroughs wrote The Naked Lunch.

It was time to head south, and seven hours' drive via Ouezzane, along roads of miserable repair, brought us parched and frazzled to Fez, Morocco's spiritual heart. Barnaby Rogerson, in his excellent Cadogan Guide to Morocco, calls Fez "the most complete, Islamic, medieval city in the world". Founded in the 9th century, the medersas, or universities, of Fez were flourishing when the city of Oxford was an inhospitable swamp. I planned to book a table to dine at the Palais Mnebbhi, a 14th-century palace in the medina where Sultan Moulay Halid signed the Treaty of Fez with General Lytton in 1912, thereby establishing the French Protectorate, and

To jaded western tourists, little seems to have changed over the centuries in Marrakesh; but it is a city where much is hidden from the casual visitor and where lives are intensely private where last year, on a private visit, the Prince of Wales ate pigeon bsilla reclining Moroccan-style on a damask divan. These days, as a restaurant, the Mnebbhi serves the best couscous in town, but the palace is difficult to find and its owner, Haj Abdeslam Sentissi, kindly said he would send someone to our hotel to escort us.

That is how we met Bousghiri Azzedine, a multilingual (nine languages, including Aramaic), Shakespearean scholar with an MA in philosophy from the University of Fez, who has written extensively on the Bard in Arabic and is the author, in English, of a widely acclaimed paper on Love's Labour's Lost. Born in Fez, the politics and precarious economics of his native Morocco oblige Azzedine to work as a tourist guide.

At Bab Boujeloud, a main gate of access to the old town, I remembered every café and the fatuous anecdotes each brought to mind. Fads and fashion simply do not enter the Moorish consciousness — jeans and satellite dishes excepted — and so things have at least the appearance of remaining the same. Certainly the Hotel Cascade seemed so. Rooms are still basic here and the spurt-style plumbing, as if the taps are going to be sick, seems not to have advanced down the years. But the Cascade does have the advantage of a good position, tucked just inside the Boujeloud gate.

At Bab Guissa, by the medina's northernmost point, we stayed at the Palais Jamal, a former vizier's palace which was once the "best" address in the city. Better days it has almost certainly seen, but the view of the medina from the Jamal's rooms and terraces will take your breath away: every traveller should pass this way at least once in a lifetime.

At dusk the old city is bathed in a pale pink light, swallows swoop across the rooftops and muezzins climb high in their kouthabs to intone their plaintive call to prayer. Then darkness falls like a velvet shroud and all night long you hear the acid twang of bells, and crowing cocks, and dogs, and distant drums pounding ancient, secret messages.

Like a layered fruit cake, like an oily, rich cassoulet, each town, each city of Morocco titillates, seduces, then defies you to leave.

There is never enough time here; at the moment you begin to assimilate the smell and the colour, when your ear grows accustomed to the rhythms of the alleyways and your gait has adapted to respect the donkey's right of way — unless you are very lucky, that is the moment when you have to move on.

And so we came to Marrakesh. The lanterns were being lit in Djemma el Fna, the Square of the Dead, and the braziers stoked, and the boy dancers from the deep south were starting to shake back and forth like holy men on acid, as we sipped tea on a tourist terrace overlooking the sprawling, pulsating parade ground.

"Are you with the German group?" a short, fat man with an umbrella had asked my father, years before, on this terrace. "No, I'm with the Woolwich," he had replied, always quick on the draw.

You cannot mind tour groups in Marrakesh; you cannot deny other human beings a glimpse of this earthy beauty, this exquisite, bone-dry ante-Atlas air, this lifting up of eyes to the snow-covered mountains beyond.

Yet Marrakesh is essentially a private place, a place of mystery, deep, difficult, unfathomable, with its hugger-mugger gardens like St Laurent's magical Majorelle, the pavilions and orchards of the Agdal, and the deceptively simple symmetry of the Menara.

Poverty, I know, is a relative term. In the summer of 1978 we considered ourselves poor, and the three of us stayed for a fortnight in the CTM "hotel", a furnace on the square without basic plumbing, without basic anything. One bed and two wooden pallets, so that every third night, revolving as we did, I got lucky and slept like a sultan, between sheets. But to live as we did, even for two short weeks, around the clock, right there on the Djemma el Fna — that was everything, and when I brought that summer to mind, I understood that I, not the city, had changed.

It is true the Marrakesh "experience" is sanitised, considered from the compound of the famous Mamounia Hotel. But those who feel such overt opulence is misplaced in a city of obvious poverty are perhaps missing the point. Marrakesh is not a poor place. From the sumptuous palaces of the medina, to the ancient mud streets of the mellah, or Jewish quarter, this is a city hung with satins and brocades, painted in colours of rose and indigo and gold; where evenings are heavy with the scent of jasmine and orange blossom and a million stars shine in a cold, black sky.

Marrakesh is not poor; like most Moroccans, they are simply broke. And as for the giving of alms, an issue which confronts you constantly in this glorious land, embarrassing awkward Britons, you can do no better than follow the counsel of the Prophet. For Muhammad, when asked, "What shall we give to the poor?", answered: "Give what you can spare... and if you can spare nothing, then at least speak to them kindly."

Stay at the Mamounia if you can afford it and, if you cannot, speak kindly about it, even if you do not wholly approve.

"With the rich and the mighty, always a little patience," as Scott Fitzgerald wrote in one of his more sober moments.

La Mamounia, while not to everyone's taste, is a hotel of legends. It is vast and very beautiful, with indoor fountains, pools of roses, exotic gardens, a swimming pool which is the height of restrained luxury and a doorman so tall, so dashing in his jewelled turban and Berber cloak, that respectable women — and, for all I know, respectable men also — hardly know which way to turn.

In Marrakesh, too, the hour-glass soon empties. Three bell-boys loaded our suitcases, for here they do nothing by halves, and Ahmed, the turbaned doorman, flashed us a smile that was pure Hollywood. We eased the car past the guides at the hotel entrance and turned left on to the Avenue Bab Jdid in the direction of Casablanca, and home. We promised ourselves we would come back soon no matter where we might stay — palace, pension or palette. In Morocco, the difference is but a state of mind.

Mosque in the ancient city of Fez

MOROCCO FACT FILE

- The author travelled with British Airways (0345 22211) and Abercrombie & Kent (0171-730 9600).
- Abercrombie & Kent organises tailor-made holidays to Morocco. An itinerary similar to the one described here costs from £1,090 for 11 nights.
- British Airways flies weekly to Tangier from Heathrow and Agadir from Gatwick twice weekly to Marrakesh from Gatwick and daily to Casablanca from Heathrow. World Offers to Tangier start at £229.
- The rule used to be winter in the south, summer in the north, although with swimming pools and air-conditioning this is changing. Marrakesh temperatures exceed 100°F in July and August; in Tangier expect rain some of the time between November and April. Winter temperatures rarely fall below 55°F.
- Carry small change for tipping, and tip "a little and often". The average wage in Morocco is less than five dirhams an hour (30p). Tip too much and you will be seen as a fool who does not know the value of money.
- Reading: The Travel Bookshop (0171-229 5260) recommends Cadogan Guide, Morocco (£14.99); A Year in Marrakesh, by Peter Mayne (Eland, £8.99); Fez City of Islam, by Yusuf Bakkard (Islamic Texts Society, £14.95); Morocco That Was, by Peter Harris (Eland, £8.99); Tangier, City of the Dream, by Iain Finlayson (Flamingo, £7.99).

WEST INDIES Under Sail

CRUISING THE CARIBBEAN SEA
ABOARD THE INCOMPARABLE SY SEA CLOUD
10-24 January 1998

Sailing from Antigua to Bequia, Grenada, Carriacou,
St Lucia, Iles des Saints,
British Virgin Islands, Joost
Van Dyke, St Martin, St Barts & St Kitts.

splendid and thrilling as it was 60 years ago when she was first launched. You will sail with just 60 fellow guests and once under way the Sea Cloud provides an experience no conventional cruise ship can possibly emulate. We'll heel lightly as the wind fills our sails and overhead, nimble crew members climb hundreds of feet among the rigging, setting and adjusting. The Sea Cloud, though equipped with auxiliary engines, is capable of great speed under sail. Her broad yards and narrow beam account for an average cruising distance of over 150 miles a day.

How better to explore the beautiful islands of the West Indies, than aboard the most elegant tall ship ever built as she sails through Caribbean Sea on one of the world's most romantic journeys.

Prices per person range from £3325 for an outside two berth cabin with shower and toilet to £4050 for a two bedded cabin. Suites range from £6300 to £6855. Double cabins are available for sole occupancy from £4200.

Price includes: Economy class air travel London/Antigua return, 14 nights aboard Sea Cloud on full board, port taxes, transfers, day use room in Antigua, expedition leader, guest speaker, UK departure tax. Not included: Travel insurance, lunch on Day 15, shore excursions, tips to crew.

FOR FURTHER DETAILS
Please telephone 0171-409 0376
(7 days a week during office hours)

NOBLE CALEDONIA LIMITED
11 CHARLES STREET, MAYFAIR, LONDON W1X 8LE
TELEPHONE 0171-409 0376 FACSIMILE 0171-409 0834
24 HOUR BROCHURE ANSWERPHONE 0171-355 1424
ATOL 3108 ABTA V2121

Australia: From ancient rainforest and the wonders of the Great Barrier Reef to the duck-billed platypus ...

Snorkellers enjoy a marine spectacle off Port Douglas

Ramble in the jungle

The train climbs slowly through the steamy, lush undergrowth, its vintage carriages snaking through cuttings, over waterfalls and around precipitous gorges. A century ago the old railway to Kuranda was the only way for tin miners and gold prospectors on the high plateau to reach the Queensland coast thousands of feet below. Now the 20-mile line, one of the most expensive and accident-prone ever built, is a spectacular route through the once impenetrable rainforest, a glimpse back to the days when swamps, jungles, disease and poisonous snakes and insects made Australia's tropical cone one of the world's most inhospitable regions.

Hauled by a diesel, the 12-carriage train takes 90 minutes to reach the top of the mountain range. In the old days a steam engine could pull only four carriages and took almost six hours to negotiate the curved trestle bridges, 15 tunnels and 98 sharp bends.

At the height of its construction, more than 1,000 men were at work on the mountain, living on campsite clearings already overgrown with creepers and dense vegetation. Sometimes it rained for 20 days on end, and mosquitoes, snakes, landslides and cave-ins took their toll.

It still rains torrentially. Northern Queensland receives more precipitation than anywhere else in the country, and rivers course down the slopes into the sea where Captain Cook, his crew sick and despairing, sailed slowly up the coastline looking for safe harbour to put in for repairs after Endeavour had been holed by the underwater coral of the Great Barrier Reef. Cook named the mountains and features according to his mood — Mount Sorrow, Cape Tribulation. Now the coastline is Australia's top tourist draw and the rainforest draws thousands to marvel at the dense gloom of its vegetation.

The Barrier Reef is a national marine park visited by huge catamaran cruises that moor above the underwater kingdom to allow divers and snorkellers to view millions of rainbow-coloured fish and corals. The huge crocodiles that bask immobile on the muddy estuary banks are photographed by hundreds of tourists gliding down the rivers in search of Australia's dangerous wildlife.

Cairns is the centre of tourism in the region — a fast-growing town whose centre is now taken over by hotels, restaurants, shops, discos and all the hectic partying of the thousands who arrive, especially from Japan.

From here the giant aluminium catamarans set out each morning, gliding across the sea with their powerful stern jets emitting plumes of spray. One company, Quicksilver, has moored its own floating platform above the reef, where instructors teach novices to dive or snorkel and where glass-sided boats meander above the steep banks of coral.

The Great Barrier Reef stretches some 1,500 miles along the coast, encompassing

Mangroves, Daintree River: Rainforests and swamps that once made tropical Australia one of the world's most inhospitable regions now draw tourists in their thousands 2,900 individual reefs and 618 continental islands. Protected by Unesco's World Heritage List, it is home to 1,500 species of fish, 242 different types of birds, 22 different whales and 400 species of coral.

No snorkeller can see all that, but even in two hours of exploring you can look at an astounding range of sparkling, translucent fish, as well as huge marine turtles, stingrays and even the occasional shark, all gliding silently among the corals that branch like antlers or spread out like huge underwater mushrooms. No one is allowed to drop anything overboard, remove any corals or disturb the fish. Both the Federal and Queensland governments have drawn up a protection plan to ensure that the only disturbances come from the cyclones that churn up the seas.

The land expeditions into the rainforest also set off from Cairns. Further up the coast is Port Douglas, a beautiful sheltered anchorage that has become an upmarket tourist haven, recently boasting Chancellor Helmut Kohl and President Bill Clinton among its guests.

Further inland is the Daintree National Park, a genetic marvel, a sanctuary for thousands of species isolated from the world when Australia separated from Asia. Boardwalks have been built through the hardwoods and palms, the mangrove swamps and the rattans. Guides point out some species that date back to prehistoric times, others with toxic fruits, creepers with razor-sharp climbing hooks and those that shed huge nuts that only the giant birds of the forest can eat.

The rainforest has a dangerous fascination. P&O has established an exclusive resort in the jungle, but those looking out from the elegant shaded balconies have difficulty realising that this is not a film backdrop but a home to snakes, dangerous feral pigs, cane toads that are poisonous and innumerable insects. A different view of the rainforest is now possible — from above. After years of environmental argument, Skyrail built a five-mile cableway from Kuranda down the mountain to a point near Cairns. Opened in 1995, it is the world's longest gondola cableway, and gives an unprecedented view of the rainforest canopy — the palms, creepers and creatures who have battled to reach the light.

The rainforest was once inhabited by Aborigines. They now live in towns or on Aboriginal land. But they have not lost the skills of jungle culture and survival, and in Kuranda a troupe of Aborigines performs an authentic 30-minute routine depicting animals, hunting and food gathering. The Pamagirri Dancers, their bodies painted in animal decoration, may be only a whisper from an ancient civilisation. But they convey the excitement, the danger and the rituals of a country with a history and wild geography that go back millennia.

MICHAEL BINYON

A platypus on the bill

Over there," shouts a woman wearing a yellow T-shirt and pink shorts and breaking all the rules. We have been told to be patient, quiet and dressed discreetly so as not to alarm the platypus which swim and feed in Broken River in the rainforest at Eungella National Park in Queensland. Fortunately the platypus we have spotted ignores its audience of five and the screeching cacophony of the cockaboo's dusk chorus. It floats centre-stage in the gentle current as though rostered for the evening performance to display its duck-like bill and glossy waterproof fur. Then it swims a strange aquatic waddle using its webbed front feet before diving steeply.

We follow its trail of bubbles as it disappears in the brown water to sift the river bed for lava, grubs and small shrimps. The bubbles stop and we scan the river trying to see where it surfaces.

"There," cries an onlooker at least a minute later, pointing to a small log.

There is indeed a platypus alongside it — but is it the same one?

Then someone spots what is probably our star floating further upstream taking a breath and chewing its prey before diving again.

The second platypus swims closer and disappears into its burrow to our left. In just over an hour there are six sightings of these enchanting egg-laying mammals whose origins are still a mystery. When the first platypus skin arrived in Britain almost 200 years ago, scientists thought it was a hoax.

According to Steve Pearson, a local naturalist, Eungella is an excellent place to watch platypus in the wild.

"They inhabit most rivers on the east coast but they are such shy creatures people rarely see them. Here they have become accustomed to being watched but I wouldn't recommend bringing the kids to watch them during the July and August mating season," he says with a grin.

"Honestly, they behave like animals."

JOHN MCLEOD

● The best viewing times to see the platypus are at dawn or dusk. Eungella National Park is approximately 60 miles North West of Mackay, Queensland (0061 705 84552).

Duck-billed platypus

WORLDCOVER
ANNUAL TRAVEL INSURANCE
CALL US ON 0800 365 121

10 steak for

WEEK ON T

Catch The one and only QE2 World Cruise 1998
with 20% off.
If you move fast!

Join QE2 for all 120 nights of her spectacular World Cruise — or for as few as 14 — and save 20% off the published fare. Or, circle the globe with Royal Viking Sun, the world's top rated cruise ship and enjoy the same generous savings. To catch either offer, you must book and pay in full before 15 August 1997, so make your move now. Call today or complete and return the coupon below.

For full details,
a brochure or reservations see your travel agent
or call Cunard on:
01703 716605
quoting TIM/QR5

www.cunardline.com

To: Cunard, World Cruise Sales Department, FREEPOST S01533, Southampton SO14 3YH.

Please send me a copy of Cunard's 1998 World Cruise brochures.

Name

Address

Postcode Tel no

QUEEN ELIZABETH 2 • ROYAL VIKING SUN

CUNARD
where you see the world

... and Tasmania's dramatic scenery plus the continent's distinctive native 'tucker'

Tassie's call of the wild

On the afternoon before I sailed, my friends in Melbourne insisted on checking the shipping forecast and dispatching me to a chemist for extra-strength stomach cement.

"Cross the Bass Strait?" the chemist asked as he wrapped up this bottle of 100-proof gut adhesive.

"How did you know that?" I asked.

"One of the roughest seas in the world, the Bass Strait. And, down here, this is the stuff everyone uses to get them through the voyage. Ever been to Tasmania before?" I shook my head.

"Before you get off the ship tomorrow, don't forget to set your clock back 25 years," he advised.

I grabbed my bottle and headed for the Port of Melbourne.

It was not the first time I had heard a lame joke about Tassie: that sparsely populated chunk of land, marooned in permanent geographic exile due south of the Australian mainland. One Sydney friend had noted that it was "very Kiwi" (a common Australian synonym meaning backward, humourless, smugly provincial), and some of my temperate-minded acquaintances had informed me that Tasmania was, quite simply, paradise.

Certainly, the ship that made the 14-hour crossing from Melbourne, The Spirit of Tasmania, was anything but paradise. Rather it seemed to consider itself a sort of Butlin's Sur-la-Mer — a floating holiday camp, replete with poker machines, roasts, dinners, organised fun. The standard sartorial attire among the passengers was the miln-green shell suit, and the ship's décor seemed to hark back to an era when Abba and Bjorn Borg kept us entertained. Maybe I really should have set my watch back 25 years. But, miraculously, the Bass Strait that night was as motionless as plate glass and my bottle of stomach cement sat unopened as we steamed our way south.

We docked in a small port town called Devonport. It was 8.30am on Saturday. The streets were empty. The townscape was nowhere else. Provincial, the air was thick with rustic ennui. And I found myself thinking: "You travel to the bottom of the world, and what's the payoff? You land in the Irish Midlands."

It took about ten minutes to decide that Devonport and I were going to part company, so I pointed my car in the direction of Longford, because it had to be an improvement on the Longford that is located in the Irish Midlands (and which, if my memory serves me well, is home to one of the largest pet food factories in the Irish Republic). As it turned out, this Longford was a dazzling surprise. Verdant, rolling fields, neatly parcelled by formal hedges. Old country piles, redolent of Tasmania's colonial beginnings. An airy, gossamer tone to the light lent this stately landscape (best described as Gainsborough Goes Antipodean) a certain mythic, ethereal quality.

Wagnerian undertones: Cradle Mountain, plus the immense glacial lake, forms part of a vast national park about two hours' drive from Hobart

As I was to discover during the next few days, Tasmanian light is as moody and volatile as a habitual insomniac. Travelling from Longford across the island's mid-section, I traded Avon and Somerset for a landscape right out of the African veld. Grassy parklands gave way to a terrain of gum trees and hard rocky soil that was the colour of burnt custard. The sun was suddenly merciless, incandescent — a potent hint of the arid bush in an island usually noted for its green and pleasant landscape.

Then this harsh desert sun suddenly transformed itself into a dark, murky Nordic gloom once I was within the urban boundaries of Hobart, the state capital.

This was something of a revelation — a hummocky city of steep hills and venerable wood-framed houses that (both in temperament and visual character) seemed more Scandinavian than Antipodean. Wandering through the back streets of its port, loitering without much intent in its excessively pretty parklands, exploring its vertiginous inner suburbs, I became quickly beguiled by its alluring melancholy — the long shadows and moat whisky that bathed the city at dusk; a sense that this was a serious, cultured place where people spent the evening reading books, listening to the baroque top ten (Hobart boasts a first-rate chamber orchestra), and drinking heavily.

Indeed, in Hobart you really felt as if you had reached the metropolitan end of the line — the last outpost of late 20th-century life before that frozen void called Antarctica (the

FACT FILE

- The author travelled to Tasmania with Qantas (0345 747767). Daily flights begin at 1875 via Melbourne.
- The Spirit of Tasmania sails from Melbourne to Devonport three days a week.
- Accommodation: in Longford, Woolmers (00 613 6391 1251) is an elegant country house with comfortable stone cottages. In Hobart, the Islington Elegant Private Hotel (00 613 6223 3900) is a Georgian house with splendid rooms at reasonable rates.
- When to go: Winter in Tasmania during June-September is, by Australian standards, cold and very wet.
- Reading: The Travel Bookshop (0171 229 5260) recommends The Potato Factory, by Bryce Courtenay (Mandarin, £6.99); The Lonely Shore, by Robert Hughes (Harvill, £7.99); Tasmania (Lonely Planet, £8.99).

main Hobart newspaper carries a daily Antarctic weather forecast, for all the locals who want to keep in touch with climatic conditions on the Ronne Ice Shelf).

Given its "last stop" status, it was not surprising to discover that Hobart (in fact, all of Tasmania) was peopled by a quirky supporting cast of characters: Eastern European exiles turned cartoonists. There are macro-neurotic vegans who were engaged in "whole earth agrarian experiments", assorted refugees from big city life (ad men turned bush pilots) and, more typically, just a lot of extremely smart folk who had come to realise that this island was one of the last great Edenic wildernesses on earth and a unique bolt hole at the bottom of the world.

When I spent a day hiking around Cradle Mountain (a vast national park which, like everything else in Tassie, is about two hours' drive from Hobart), I began to understand the visual uniqueness of this island.

The scenic background was Wagnerian: craggy mountains, an immense glacial lake, a forbidding sky of black, billowing clouds.

I almost expected to see some Teutonic god (and his attendant blonde Rhine maiden) rise up from this crystalline lake, break into song and then stop to look around at their surroundings and wonder: "Did we get off at the wrong exit on the way to Valhalla?"

Maybe not — because, as I tramped my way around this massive lake (a radiant shaft of light occasionally escaping from behind the inky Götterdämmerung sky), the thought struck me that Tasmania still has that raw, primitive call of the wild. And it serves to remind us jaded urbanites that there are places still left on the planet which have only been marginally sullied by human hands.

DOUGLAS KENNEDY

Roo steak for me — and make it rare

Two weeks in Australia are enough to make you seriously consider the options for emigrating to the southern hemisphere. Even without the added incentive of travelling during its official Year of Good Living, the country offers one of the most exhilarating holidays.

Playing cricket on a pitch created in the middle of a winery in the Macedon Ranges, 30 miles due north of Melbourne, may not be on everyone's itinerary, but it is an example of what can be arranged for sporting enthusiasts.

The Cope-Williams winery at Romsey on the northern slopes of Mount Macedon which specialises in sparkling wines — as well as quince jam, Cherry plum sauce, crab apple jelly with rosemary, zucchini (courgette) pickles and rosehip jelly — is set in an environment of rolling hills where the cricket oval next to the deep red soil of the vineyards seems a perfect addition.

Eating and drinking well in Australia is unavoidable. After cricker at Cope-Williams, kangaroo steaks at the Mountain Inn in Mount Macedon (not far from the famous Hanging Rock where the film Picnic at Hanging Rock was made) are obligatory for any tourist in the area who wants to take advantage of native Australian cuisine or "bush tucker". Eve, the hostess, is the sort of extrovert who could persuade a vegetarian to eat kangaroo. Cooked rare, the meat is lean, soft and tender.

Native tucker has taken off in Australia. It has become a multi-million-dollar industry. Andrew Fielke, chef at the Red Ochre Grill in Adelaide, has pioneered the use of Australia's native foods after investigating Aboriginal cooking methods, using wild fruits, such as quandong, and indigenous herbs and spices.

Mr Fielke, who plans to open a restaurant in London, offers a menu that includes emu pâté, possum rillettes, split roast babbies, Moreton

FACT FILE

- The author travelled with the Australian Tourist Commission and Austravel.
- Austravel (0171-734 7755) has flights on Britannia Airways from Gatwick from £599 in February/March/April to Sydney, Adelaide, Brisbane, Melbourne. Domestic flights with Ansett bookable from £30 per sector.
- Accommodation: The author stayed at the Centre hotel in Melbourne bookable through Austravel from £40 per person, and the Hindley Park hotel in Adelaide, available through Ucell (0990 300200) from £99 per double.

Bay bogs with river mint chilli sauce, and chargrilled kangaroo fillet steak. Koolas, of course, are not on the menu. They appear to be far too cuddly... and protected.

Mr Fielke's restaurant in Adelaide is located in the middle of a mile long strip of shops, restaurants and clubs, where in the evenings the twentysomethings cruise up and down in polished convertibles at about 50mph, begging to be noticed by all — or at least some — of the diners sitting at crowded tables on the pavements.

Adelaide is also the home of the famous Adelaide Oval, renowned as the world's prettiest cricket ground and scene of the most dramatic match of the notorious Bodyline series.

Although the Adelaide Oval, like the even grander Melbourne cricket ground, also plays host these days to Australian Rules football matches and pop concerts as part of a drive for commercial success, it remains a place that still has echoes of legendary Test players.

It also has a historic and unique scoreboard which relies on positively

Heath Robinson technology — which is all explained in minute detail by Frank, its chief practitioner for the past 14 years. Guided tours can be arranged.

For a holiday as short as two weeks, the visits have to be limited. It is impossible to do justice to states such as Queensland, if you want to spend enough time in Victoria and South Australia. However, it is difficult to imagine not making the effort to fly on to New South Wales to visit Sydney.

Australia is a breathtaking country and of its cities, Sydney is the most exciting for the first-time visitor. Viewed from my hotel bedroom window, the Opera House appeared to change shape and colour as the day wore on and there is certainly no better place to contemplate the venue for the next meal than the Botanical Gardens, situated behind Australia's most famous landmark.

MICHAEL EVANS

A Special Offer A WEEK ON THE NILE

The demand for Nile cruises has increased dramatically as a direct result of the very low tariffs which were fixed prior to the opening of the Suez Canal to four operators and are set to increase again. We have responded to this unique situation by contracting a number of very fine Nile cruise vessels which ply the traditional itinerary between Luxor and Aswan. Since these vessels are marketed according to specific cabin and deck types and across the different vessels there are normally a limited number of unsold cabins which are not always easy for us to identify and market in the traditional manner. The choice of vessels on which to cruise will be the MS Ra, the MS Soleil and the MS Diamond. If, like most people, a Nile cruise has always been on your list of Classic Journeys and you are prepared to leave the vessel assignment to us, then this is a rare opportunity that should not be missed.

ITINERARY IN BRIEF

Day 1 Depart from Gatwick for Luxor and join your vessel. Day 2 Optional sightseeing programme around Thebes. Sail to Esna. Day 3 Depart for Edfu, then sail on to Kom Ombo. Day 4 Cruise to Aswan with optional sightseeing programme. Day 5 Optional morning excursion by road to Abu Simbel (475). Day 6 Sail towards Luxor and overnight at Esna. Day 7 Arrive Luxor for including direct flights, 5-star Nile cruiser, full board & knowledgeable local guides 7 nights from £295.00

optional sightseeing programme. Day 8 Fly direct to London Gatwick.
DEPARTURE DATES & PRICES
1997 Mondays - per person in a lower deck twin cabin
July 21, 28, £295 - August 4, 11, 18, 25, £295
September 1, 8, 15, 22, £290
Upper decks supplement £95.00
Includes air travel, transfers, Tugboat cruises, full board, local guides. Not included: insurance, visa procurement, excursions (bookable on board), UK airport tax (£10) will be added to your invoice. Please note: Itinerary may be operated on different sequential dates based on prevailing local dates. Our current Conditions of Booking apply of which is available on request. I shall apply to all reservations. You will be advised your suggested departure date approximately 10 days prior to departure. Please note that other similar 5-star vessels/boutique fleet may be utilized.
0171-6161000
VOYAGES JULES VERNE
21 Dorset Square, London NW1 4GG
Travel from London: 0161 476 4765
Internet: <http://www.vjv.co.uk>
Our offices are open for enquiries and reservations. For personal calls, we collect. Battersley House, 100, Victoria Road, London W12 9LQ.

WORD WATCHING

Answers from page 23

PAK PAI

(a) In Hong Kong, a car used illegally as a taxi. From the Cantonese, literally, "white licence". "Triad" gangs are involved in the operation of extortion rackets with minibuses, pak pais and goods vehicles illegally used for passengers in rural areas.

PIPERADE

(c) A dish originating in the Basque country, consisting of eggs, tomatoes, and peppers, and resembling an omelette. E. H. Clements, Note of Enchantment: "Alister... ordered a piperade and ate it unhurriedly with a hunk of bread."

RACKENSAK

(b) A native of Arkansas. Probably an altered form of Arkansas. "Artillerists and dragons, suckers and rackensacks, were all mixed up in confusion."

OCOTILLO

(c) A spiny shrub, Fouquieria splendens, of the family Fouquieriaceae, native to the south-western United States and Mexico and bearing narrow, inconspicuous leaves and panicles of red flowers. "It was not uncommon for visitors to the region to suffer painful and humiliating injuries to their posterior having mistakenly sat down on the mighty little ocotillo."

Les Cross Channel Bargains of '97

Short Break

from £89 return

Club Break

from £129 return

Economy Return

from £149

Duty Free

lowest prices guaranteed.

le Shuttle

Folkestone Calais

For reservations call

0990 35 35 35

or your travel agent.

Le Shuttle guarantees the lowest Duty Free prices across the Channel. If you find the identical Duty Free product for sale cheaper from another cross-Channel operator within twenty-one days from the date you purchased it from Le Shuttle we'll refund the difference. Excludes promotional prices or prices that are conditional upon making other purchases. All claims must be made within twenty-eight days of purchase from Le Shuttle. Prices quoted include car and all passengers and are valid between 10pm and 6am.

Eastern Europe: Medieval marvels and yellow liqueur in Prague, Art Nouveau and expectation in Latvia

Taverns, turrets and people's opera

It was when I discovered that the Czech word for "yes" is "ano" that I accepted without demur that the language, at least, must remain a closed book. Fortunately this does not matter, as most people in the fabulous city of Prague seem to speak English of a sort that is, Hollywood American.

The drive into the capital of the Czech Republic is curiously reminiscent of a London suburb — right up until the moment one crosses a fine old bridge surmounted by custard-coloured columns and rattles over cobbles into Prague proper.

The sight of ancient clusters of deep pastel buildings, bristling with onion domes, minarets and Disney-like castle turrets, some sparkling gold, others glinting like silvery coal, stops the heart.

I emerged from the taxi at the Hotel Pariz — an Art Nouveau masterpiece — grateful and sickish, largely due to the jolting on the rounded cobbles that pave the city.

The first thing you notice while wandering the fine, broad main streets and squares (and fervering down the alleys) is the buzz. Even on a weekday afternoon, the city is alive with people — mostly young, clearly local but as happy as tourists. They, too, seem to take pleasure in the startling and romantic architecture. They, too, pack the pavement cafes and bars.

Western decadence sits well among Eastern European splendour. People point out with pride the capitalist banks, the giant Tesco and the site of the coming Marks & Spencer.

However, the map in the city's phone book highlights only the churches and the four branches of McDonald's.

The good feeling extends into the night — bars, discos and clubs stay open far later than in, say, Florence. And a Budvar Budweiser beer (the local pride and joy) should set you back no more than 50p. Things are generally fairly cheap — and that includes the whores. You meet these if you cross the vast and famous Wenceslas Square (which is not a square, just a long and broad street).

One must defend not so much one's honour as one's wallet — pickpocketing is rife, but apparently most other types of crime are virtually unknown. It is quite safe to walk through most of the city at any time.

It is easy to find your way around and the skyline, together with a decent guidebook, soon make one aware of all the essential visits, such as Charles Bridge — a grand 14th-century affair covered with statues as well as mummings, minstrels and dancers. Old Town Square is another, as is the fantastic cathedral of St Vitus (the city's most prominent landmark, also 14th century) — and you must go to the opera. There are superb productions and ridiculously cheap tickets.

After the exertion of all this sightseeing, what you will want is food. And drink: Bechovova, almost inevitably — a yellow, herby and potent liqueur that starts and ends the meal. The "champagne" is sweetish Bohemia Sekl. If you do not want beer, a decent red

Statues line the parapets of Charles Bridge, which spans the Vltava to link Prague's "old" and "new" towns. Both are in fact ancient quarters, their architectural gems remarkably preserved down the ages wine is Svatovavrinecke (not easy to say after a couple of bottles — or indeed, before). The clergy has been drinking it since 1264: it is actually an altar wine, but it seems to be everywhere. Food is good and hearty: goose, venison, duck, pork — and something called "three sorts of dumpling" which translates as three sorts of awful.

Puddings are rich: pastry, cream, cherries, cream, plums, cream, a slug of herby liqueur and maybe just a bowl of cream to finish off with. You will not starve in Prague.

One is reluctant to leave this glorious, gutsy and beautiful city, but the one thing that lured me away with ease was the prospect of the journey home on the Venice Simplon Orient-Express.

I had always wanted to go on this train and it did not disappoint. Contrary to all the advertisements, you do not have to sport shingles, clothes and long cigarette holders, nor moustaches and monocles, but they certainly do not discourage it. The lavish brochure advises that it is impossible to overdress, and one or two dozen Americans had taken it at its word.

The corridor through-out this gorgeously rich and stylish train is as narrow as you might expect. If you find yourself behind a lady in a frou-frou frock, you could well find progress slow. The bar is lavishly yet discreet (how did they squeeze in the grand piano?) but pride of place goes to the pair of dining cars, superb and glossy in veneers. Liqueur crystal parades and gleaming pink silk-shaded lamps (for sale at £350 a pop). The food is remarkably good and so, too, is the service. It is important to enter into the spirit of this delightful 24-hour game.

And so to bed in my luxury Havana humidifier-like cabin as the bogies beneath rhythmically strum. We fly through the night, pausing next morning in Paris to take on fabulous provisions and by Boulogne (where you transfer via the Sea Cat to the equally roomy and elegant Pullman to

FACT FILE

- The author travelled with City Escapes in conjunction with Orient Express and Cedok.
- City Escapes (0171-563 999) offers many permutations of trip to Prague. Prices start at £202 for flights and three nights B&B. A three-night package including outbound flights and return Orient Express to London starts at £1,345.
- Orient Express (0171-405 5100) offers a similar package from £1,350: trips incorporating Vienna or Venice also available.
- Accommodation: Hotel Pariz (00 4202 24 2215) has double rooms from £160.
- For more information: Czech Republic Tourist Authority (0171-291 9920).
- Reading: The Travel Bookshop (0171-229 5260) recommends Magic Prague by Angelo Maria Ripellino (Picador, £9.99).

London Victoria) you feel quite comfortable with the idea of living on the train for ever. "One gentleman," says the chief steward, "comes on every trip. He says he loves to live on the Orient Express, and hopes to die on it too — preferably in his sleep."

JOSEPH CONNOLLY

An enduring Baltic beauty

For a country as small as Latvia (population 2,600,000), Riga might seem an extravagantly large capital with its 900,000 inhabitants. Yet this was a great city state and the queen of the eastern Baltic long before St Petersburg was a twinkle in anyone's eye. Founded by the Teutonic knights in 1201, Riga later joined the Hanseatic League, a powerful trading confederation which stretched along the Baltic littoral and into the North Sea as far west as Bruges. The league shaped northern European trade for the next 300 years until the transatlantic navigators discovered the New World.

Like many Eastern European cities after communist rule, Riga gives the feeling of a place waiting for something to happen. This has something to do with its low levels of traffic and almost inordinate sense of spaciousness. The city suffered terrible destruction during the Second World War — from the Germans in 1941 and the Russians in 1944. Trapped between powerful and predatory neighbours, Latvians frequently found themselves fighting on opposite sides, father against son, brother against brother.

The city's buildings have occasional Stalinist echoes, but the view from the top of St Peter's Church reveals a panorama of tiled roofs, spires and onion domes. St Peter's was largely destroyed by artillery bombardment, yet its warm red brick Gothic vaulting has been rebuilt and its spire restored to make it one of the finest Baltic churches.

Riga is a city where gems of architecture seem to spring out from the most unexpected places. The Art Nouveau quarter, with its Jugendstil buildings, many of which are the work of Michael Eisenstein (father of the Soviet filmmaker Sergei) is perhaps without peer in Europe. When fully restored its streets will be one of the glories of Baltic urban architecture.

The Daugava River flows past Riga's domes and spires

Away from its cities, Latvia is a land of forests and fertile plains which seem to run straight into the tideless Baltic. There are no vast distances to be travelled in this microcosm of a country. Only 50km to the south of Riga is the Rundale Palace, built in the 18th century as the summer residence of the Dukes of Courland. The funds for this imposing Baltic Versailles were extorted from the Russian empress Anna Ivanovna by a crafty gigolo called Ernst Johann Biron, who was to become Duke of Courland in 1737.

The besotted tsarina placed at Biron's disposal her favourite architect, Rastrelli. The death of his mistress brought an end to Biron's promising career, but he outlived this setback. Rundale was com-

FACT FILE

- The author travelled with Gumpel Travel Service (01473 828355). From September, a three-night stay in a four-star Riga hotel will cost from £347 based on two sharing. IntraTravel (0171-323 3305) offers flights and three nights B&B from £300.
- Riga Airlines (01293 535727) has fares from Gatwick from £245.
- Reading: The Travel Bookshop (0171-229 5260) recommends Professor Marston's Departure by Jean Kross (Harvill, £9.99); Bradt Guide Latvia (£10.95).

pleted in 1768: its handsome exterior and lofty salons make it one of the Baroque gems of northern Europe.

Springtime is an especially attractive season to visit Latvia. In the Zemgale, the wetlands in the south of the country, the storks are settling into trees and on to rooftops after their long journey from Africa, and the farmers can breathe again at this renewed promise of continuing fertility. And on the coast it is a strange sensation to walk in shirt-sleeves down a beach of silver sand to a silent sea, still frozen out to the horizon.

PETER DAVIES

SPECIAL OFFER

from £349

CUBA

6 nights including breakfast

Enjoy 6 nts in Havana, capital of Cuba, the Caribbean's largest island. At Marina Hemingway, the superior medium class Marina Hemingway Hotel enjoys a delightful location. All rooms are attractively furnished, fully airconditioned, and have 2 beds (small doubles), fridge, phone, TV (satellite), bath, shower and balcony with views over the yacht moorings and marina.

FREE return shuttle bus to Old Havana
(3 times daily/ approx 20 mins)

Departures	Prices	Departures	Prices
05 Aug '97	£439	11.25 Nov	£419
12 Aug	£439	02 Dec	£399
19 Aug	£419	09 Dec	£340
02 Sep	£379	16 Dec	£479
09.30 Sep	£349	23 Dec	£529
14.21 Oct	£399	30 Dec	£499

7 nts optional beach extension from £130 RB

The price includes: Scheduled return flights, Gatwick, 6 nts second inc breakfast. Half rail air tour. Transfers. Prices per person sharing twin. Not included: UK Dep't tax (£10 will be added to invoice) (£20 from 01 Nov 97). Cuba visa: £15. Local dep't tax: £15. Booking conditions apply. Opt-in insurance: £20 (6 nts), £32 (13 nts).

To book, telephone: (open daily inc Sat/Sun)
01306 744300

Fax: 01306 744334
ATA V250X
ATOL 152

The Travel Collection
Dorndene House, Dorking, Surrey RH5 4AZ

A Special Summertime Offer

A Week Away at the 5-star Elephant Hills Hotel at Victoria Falls from £595

What could be more delightful than a relaxing sojourn in the comfort of the 5-star Elephant Hills Hotel at the magnificent Victoria Falls. This is a wonderful opportunity, at an extremely moderate tariff, to visit one of the natural wonders of the world. The Victoria Falls is a marvellous place both to relax in a temperate climate and to use as a base from which to explore with visits to the Falls themselves, the nearby town of Victoria Falls, a Zambezi cruise, local and regional game viewing and much besides.

The arrangement commences with a flight from London Gatwick on our special, non-stop, scheduled seat-configured Boeing 767 aircraft to Harare, Zimbabwe, and onward flight to Victoria Falls. A limited number of places are available and since the demand is anticipated to be high, it is essential that early telephone reservations are made to avoid disappointment.

THE ELEPHANT HILLS HOTEL

Three kms from the roar of the Falls, Elephant Hills is unique in both style and location, providing a spectacular panorama. With its 276 bedrooms, its expansive swimming area and sophisticated casino, the hotel provides a memorable blend of luxury and wilderness.

DEPARTURE DATES & PRICES
Tuesdays - per person in a twin
1997 Aug 12, 19, 26, £595
Sept 2, 9, 16, 23, 30, £595 - Oct 7, 14, 21, 28, £595
Single surpl. £95 - Extra Week: £195 (single £245)

0171-6161000

VOYAGES JULES VERNE
21 Dorset Square, London NW1 6GG
Travel Permit: 001441, 007411061, ATOL 0000
Internet: <http://www.vjv.co.uk>

Our villas are open Monday to Friday from 10am to 5pm and at weekends for telephone reservations from 10am. For personal visitation call 0171-6161000.

40% off Swan Hellenic Cruises

4-14 Aug: ABCEAN INTERLUDE
Island hopping in the Aegean.

14-28 Aug: SAILING TO BYZANTIUM
The great classical sites of Greece & Turkey.

For details of Standby Fares call today.

0171 800 2200

ATOL 0307

WEEKEND · SATURDAY JULY 12 1997

Britain: Rank has embraced the holiday village idea, but will it be able to surpass its rival, Center Parcs?

What's the story? Oasis glory

Center Parcs have had their own way for ten years in Britain. Well-heeled families have been arriving in droves at Sherwood Forest or Elveden, Suffolk, or Longleat, Wiltshire, and having a terrific time, telling their friends not to be put off by the tacky name because it is perfectly tasteful, although not cheap... oh, and when is half-term so we can book again? But now the woodland world of chalets and heated swimming domes has a competitor.

Not far from the Lake District a new "holiday village" called Oasis has arrived, adopting the sound business strategy that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery and an almost guaranteed route to success. Despite this being the first attempt by Rank in this field (compared with the vast experience here and abroad of Center Parcs, a Dutch company), it looks as if it will flourish.

First, however, the voice of the environmentally minded holidaymaker: must we chop down huge swathes of forest to build these places? Yes, if you want a holiday village, you make a big hole in a wood. This kind of enterprise would not work in open fields, or on the edge of towns. The whole appeal lies in escaping from the weekly cycle of work to a carefully crafted mix of man-made pleasures and secluded natural beauty.

In the case of Oasis, carved out of Whinliff Forest, Cumbria — a commercial conifer plantation grown in the 19th century on the Lowther Estate — the objections cannot be as strong as if ancient wood had been felled. No cars are allowed, so you cycle everywhere on roads, from your lodge (chalet-like, self-catering, very comfortable) to your chosen activity (there are many) and around the 400-acre site. Young children, unaccustomed to such freedom on two wheels, adore it. If Dad is here to find a quiet corner to read a book, he is on the wrong holiday. He could find plenty of isolated spots if he really wanted, though he would do better to head off into the wood nearest to home.

When a red squirrel put in a skittering appearance on our first morning a few yards from the lodge, the punctilious environmental claims of the owners began to have substance. During construction nothing was removed from the site but was "redistributed".

Trees were removed with root balls intact and transported to suitable sites, rare plants protected, badger setts avoided and gates set into the boundary fence for them. Red squirrel feeders have actually increased numbers, they claim. Rabbits are everywhere — even pine martens, apparently, who are known to eat red squirrel tarts.

One afternoon a cheerful forest ranger, at ease with seven or seventy-year-olds, took a small group of us on a "discovery" walk out of the forest and beyond. For 15

No cars are allowed so you cycle everywhere — young children adore the freedom quiet minutes a buzzard's nest high in a Scots pine showed little sign of activity. Then a red squirrel scampered up the trunk and suddenly, through the binoculars, a wing flapped and a snowy white and grey head appeared with a disdainful stare. A pheasant rustled through the bracken below. The squirrel, having located a feeder, settled down to an early supper. We strolled back for ours.

If you do not bring food to cook in your lodge, but rely on the wide range of restaurants on site, it will become an expensive stay. We tried several places — a pub (part of the Tom Cobleigh chain, gimmicky, intrusive music, standard pub fare, but a parents' dream of a play area); Italian (good); Indian (swish, food fine but pricey, service charming but chaotic); and French (swisher still, pleasant, almost empty).

The Butterfly building at Oasis houses pools, flumes, wild water rapids, a bowling alley, children's club, cinema, shops and restaurants with boating lake in front combination of canoeists, windsurfers, sailors, banana boat riders and pedalos.

The airy, attractive Butterfly building is the focal point of Oasis, and houses the World of Water pools, flumes, wild water rapids — a big favourite, the bowling alley, the children's club, a cinema, shops and restaurants.

The other main building, supposed to be the biggest wooden building in Europe, is the Country Club. This is the sports complex with the Sanctuary spa attached.

Apart from the usual offerings such as short tennis, squash, badminton, snooker and aerobics, you can play ricket, a racket game similar to squash, but in a smaller court where the ball can bounce off the ceiling and the scoring is done electronically. There are only five courts in Britain, but more than 200 on the Continent, mostly in Holland and Germany. This game is less intimidating than squash — for a start, the ball does not need warming up — and deserves to catch on.

The Sanctuary health spa looks superb. Two of my party underwent Rasul treatment, which has something to do with three colours of mud, large turquoise ceramic chairs, herbal steam, unexpected showers and Arabic ingenuity. The dry flotation tank, which involves lying wrapped in a rubber sheet on a bed of warm water with the lights dimmed, was immensely relaxing. These treatments are pricey, but the quality makes them worth it if you like that kind of thing.

Oasis prides itself on several innovations that are supposed to be superior to Center Parcs — such as prebooking of activities before you arrive, use of smart cards for payment and a customs-style check-in. During our stay the Freedom cards were only working sporadically, but are a good idea. They are aimed at children to make them aware of how much they are spending.

Before Rank moved in, Center Parcs viewed Whinliff Forest as a potential site, but rejected it. Rain and snow in winter may have been one factor; the competing attraction of the nearby Lakes drawing visitors away from the site another. But Rank has taken the plunge and, despite delaying the opening because of technical problems and leaving customers in the lurch (though compensating them with a free visit) and despite minor teething problems, it has done a fine job. Scots pine forest, with virtually no foliage below about 40 feet, does leave the lodges less secluded than at the Center Parcs I visited, but little can be done about that.

I have never known anyone return from these leisure breaks, whether at Oasis or Center Parcs, without having thoroughly enjoyed themselves. A three or four-night stay is an ideal length of stay. People will keep on going.

Oasis is now planning its second village, near Folkestone, Kent, but have met some determined local opposition. Its plans are on hold. Britain has four of these villages and, such is their popularity, could probably accommodate another without reaching saturation. But how much more suitable forest is there left?

Scots pines at Oasis do not allow for leafy seclusion at the lodges

TIMOTHY RICE

The merry menu of Sherwood

A hedgehog scurrying around our patio at 10pm, the expression on two-year-old Jack's face as six ducklings waddled confidently towards him from the lake and Tom, nine, sighing contentedly, saying "I wish we could live here, Mum", these are some memorable moments from our visit to the Center Parcs holiday village in Sherwood Forest, Nottinghamshire.

Not being a sporty type, it was against my better judgment that I allowed myself to be persuaded to visit Center Parcs, and I can honestly say that in 11 years of married life it is one of the few times my husband has been proved right.

The Sherwood Forest village was the first of Center Parcs' three sites in England and celebrates its tenth anniversary this year. I had heard about the Subtropical Swimming Paradise and the extensive sporting and leisure facilities, but I had not fully appreciated the commitment to the environment until I stood in our villa, gazing through our French windows into a secluded woodland glade. The site has been planned so that, although the villas are grouped in small blocks of three or four together, each has its own unrestricted view. This careful planning is evident throughout. The village square, with its shops and restaurants, has a bustling atmosphere, the country club is surrounded by more open countryside where guests play tennis, ride or practise their golf and the lakeside is tranquil. Because the site covers 400 acres and there are so many things to do, nowhere ever felt crowded.

Riding through woodland is just one of the many pastimes available at Center Parcs

The Subtropical Swimming Paradise is just that — palm trees, tropical foliage, breathtaking waterchutes, a Miro-inspired toddler's paddling pool, even hot whirlpools — the four of us spent three happy hours there.

Banning cars was an inspired decision. Even people like me, who have not ridden a bike for more than 15 years, are happy to wobble about, secure in the knowledge that I would not be crushed under the wheels of a passing juggernaut. The exhilaration of free-wheeling past my husband and sons more than makes up for my slight mishap with a bridge further along.

Unfortunately, I could not visit the new beauty therapy centre because we had to spend Sunday afternoon travelling into Worksop, 30 minutes' taxi drive away (we had travelled by train), to the nearest doctor's surgery. Jack was suddenly unwell, so we took him to the medical centre at Center Parcs to be told that there was no doctor on call at the site — an omission I found staggering.

We could not wait until the next day as Jack had developed tonsillitis. Although the staff in reception were helpful the expensive round trip, plus a mile's walk to a pharmacy and back, blighted an otherwise promising day.

But what with the pony rides, adventure golf, teapin bowling, children's disco, cycling and nature watching, overall it was a great success.

ANN HARRISON

OASIS FACT FILE

- Oasis Lakeland Forest Village, near Penrith, Cumbria (booking: 0990 086000).
- A typical two-bedroom forest lodge costs £457 for a three-night stay (Fri-Mon), £509 for four nights (Mon-Fri) and £804 for a week (Mon-Mon or Fri-Fri). This includes access to the World of Water, play areas and free entertainments.
- Examples of charges: bicycles £8.50 per break (adult), £5 children; rickshaw £5 half-hour for two; guided forest walks £2.50 adult, £1 child; French restaurant £68 for two, three courses with wine.
- Activities outside the village include clay-pigeon shooting, fly fishing, rock climbing, pony trekking and 4x4 driving.

CENTER PARCS FACT FILE

- Centre Parcs, Sherwood Forest, Nottinghamshire (booking: 0990 200300).
- A typical two-bedroom villa costs £338 for a three-night weekend stay (Fri-Mon), £405 for four nights (Mon-Fri) and £594 for a week (Fri-Fri or Mon-Mon). This includes access to the swimming paradise and play areas.
- Examples of charges: bicycles £9.50 adult, £5 children (for weekend); guided woodland walk £7.50 for adult and child (minimum age ten), including breakfast; Le Caprice restaurant, main course £10-£16 per person.
- Activities outside village include horse riding, laser clay shooting, golf course and field archery.

Save over £100 with our Bastille Day offer.

For two weeks it's our prices that get the chop.

This year celebrate Bastille Day with Seafrance. We've cut our fares to save you up to £116. Book before the 26th July and travel from Dover to Calais as little as £49 return off peak or £95 return peak. If you sail with anyone else, on your head be it.

*Prices include car and up to 9 passengers Dover to Calais standard return off peak. Book before 26th July 1997 quoting BXT1 (for £95 fare please quote BXT1). Outward travel must be completed by 31st August 1997. See your local travel agent for further details.

0990 711711 the difference c'est SEAFRANCE

ONE ITALIAN COLLECTION WITHOUT THE EXPENSIVE PRICE TAGS

ROME £215

MILAN £215

TURIN £240

PISA £215

V&NICE £215

BOLOGNA £215

Alitalia

These fares are return from London and are subject to limited availability and restricted periods. Airport taxes excluded. For details and conditions see your travel agent or call Alitalia on 0171 602 7111

AROUND THE WORLD: A WEEKEND GUIDE

The former Second World War RAF base on Gan Island in the Maldives has recently been turned into the Ocean Reef Club resort, offered by Kuoni for £699 a week

Get going for Gan

THE Second World War RAF base on Gan Island (codenamed "Port T"), on the southernmost atoll in the Maldives, is the site of the recently opened Ocean Reef Club resort offered by Kuoni (01306 743000).

When the Maldives became independent in 1965, Britain retained the lease on Gan until 1975. Now the sergeants' quarters accommodate tourists, the officers' mess is a restaurant, the officers' quarters are used by visiting Maldives officials, and the church has been converted to a mosque.

Tourists and locals generally live on separate islands in the Maldives, but holidaymakers on Gan can see something of the traditions and daily life of the Maldivians by cycling around the various islands on the atoll, which are linked by a causeway.

Keen divers can explore the wreck of the oil tanker British Loyalty, damaged by a Japanese submarine in 1944, and later scuttled. Kuoni's all-inclusive holiday with full board and drinks, water sports and entertainment costs from £699 a week.

JILL CRAWSHAW'S INTERNATIONAL TRAVEL TIPS

SOME interesting small cities are included in Citilife's (0181-686 5333) City Breaks in Italy. In Sicily, the old Norman-Bizantine stronghold of Palermo and Agrigento (the latter a modern town but with magnificent Greek temples) have been added to delightful Taormina. Three nights' B&B starts at £356, £341 and £317 respectively. On the mainland, a break in Tuscany's medieval town of San Gimignano costs £277, while both Orvieto and Urbino to Umbria start at £268, also for three nights' B&B and flights. Car hire is recommended for some destinations.

Parador pass

SPANISH paradores are offering five-night passes at a fixed price of £260 for twin or double accommodation. The "Go As You Please" pass, valid until December 20, is flexible, allowing all five nights in one parador, one night in each of five or any other combination. Other special offers include a 20 per cent discount at selected paradores for those staying on half-board for a minimum of two nights; for senior citizens (aged 60 or over), some paradores offer a 35 per cent discount between October and December. All parador accommodation can be booked through Keytel International (0171-402 8182).

Greek budget

POPULAR with families because of its sandy beaches, and recently awarded 42 EU Blue Flags for cleanliness, Halkidiki in Macedonia, Greece, is hoping to attract budget holidaymakers by offering fixed-price food and drink in its restaurants and hotels. The set price of a glass of wine, ouzo or a coffee is 300 drachmas (68p); a brandy, 450 drachmas (£1.05); a salad, 650 drachmas (£1.50) and a moussaka, 850 drachmas (£1.95). The drachma has fallen by 16 per cent against sterling since this time last year and now stands at 435 to £1.

A peak-season package costs about £400 a week, £460 for two weeks' self-catering, or £600 for two weeks' half-board. Nearby in Thessalonika — Cultural Capital of Europe for 1997 — there are many summer events and the treasures of Mount Athos are on display.

Get dug in

A BUSY 12-day tour for enthusiastic gardeners by Cedarberg Southern Africa Travel (0181-941 1717) combines the floral highlights of the Cape with visits to wine estates, whale watching, a game reserve, safaris to track white rhino and wetland wildlife. Also included is a steam train trip and a stay in a traditional Zulu village.

The Western Cape claims the richest floral diversity in the world, with more plant species on Table Mountain alone than in the whole of Britain. Garden lovers can tick them off on visits to the Kirstenbosch Botanical Gardens, the Karoo, Stellenbosch University Garden, the Harold Porter Botanical Reserve and Ferkloof Nature Reserve. The tour in October costs £1,170 half-board, including flights.

SEVILLE'S Isla Magica theme park opened in June following an investment of about £60 million. The central theme is Spanish Voyages of Discovery to the New World, with fortresses, rollercoasters, lost temples, the island of Eldorado and pirates, including Francis Drake to be tamed and repulsed. The Isla Magica is open seven days a week from 11am to at least midnight until the end of November. A day pass costs about £13 for adults, £9 for children and senior citizens.

Night trains

TRAVELLING on overnight trains can offer a double advantage — you save time and also the cost of a night in a hotel. The latest edition of Thomas Cook Publishing's Guide to European Night Trains is full of useful information.

From Zurich to Barcelona with an overnight in a four-berth compartment costs SwFr170 (about £73) with breakfast included; Vienna to Amsterdam costs 2,706 schillings (£138) in a second-class three-berth compartment, or AS4,820 schillings (£245) in a first-class single compartment. Travelling from Brussels to Rome is BFr5,840 (£100) in a six-berth couchette, BFr7,780 (£117) in a second-class three-berth compartment. The guide costs £7.95 from bookshops or direct from Thomas Cook Publishing (01733 503571/2).

Cuba to offer all-in resorts

A tourism revolution is planned for Cuba, spearheaded by a British tour operator in partnership with Fidel Castro's Government.

The Canadian parent company of Bluebird Holidays, LCI, has struck a deal to progressively take over management of several of the hotels in the Government-owned Grupo Gran Caribe chain, which has 6,000 rooms in 18 hotels on Cuba.

LCI also has plans to build, in partnership with Grupo Gran Caribe, 11 more four- and five-star hotels in four undeveloped resort areas of Cuba, which will boost the island's bedstock by a sixth.

Bluebird is earmarked as the main vehicle to fill the rooms, with plans to double tourism numbers from the UK and the rest of Europe within five years.

Stephen Powell, Bluebird managing director, said: "There is a shortage of accommodation at the top end of the market in Cuba. I compare it to the Dominican Republic."

"With these developments, Cuba will take off. Among the European countries, Britain is the baby in terms of potential growth. But Cuba is becoming very fashionable."

An estimated 10,000 Britons will visit Cuba this summer. Bluebird wants to double the number and carry 100,000 from Europe in total within five years. The company is already in talks with airlines and other operators to run charter aircraft direct to the island next summer.

The new developments are based on the all-inclusive concept that has swept through the Caribbean in the past decade, and include golf, private beaches and water sports.

In January, LCI took over the management of its first Grupo Gran Caribe hotel, the 400-room Pelicano in Cayo Largo.

Meanwhile, work will start on the 11 new properties on August 1. When completed, from 1999, they will add 4,200 rooms to the island's total bedstock of 24,000 rooms.

Several other hotel chains are looking to Cuba for expansion, with the Spanish Sol Melia group already managing seven properties on the island.

The Cuban Government's desire to work with foreign companies is partly reflected in the fact that the poor quality of existing hotels has been a restraining factor in tourism growth. Only 11 per cent of rooms are considered to be five-star rated.

With airlines barred from flying to Cuba from US airports, Canada is the biggest market to Cuba, where demand is expected to fill the new properties during winter. LCI is primarily looking to Europe and other countries to fill the hotels in summer.

The new hotels will be built 65km east of the capital Havana and on the islands of Juvanes and Cayo Largo.

STEVEN KEENAN

The age of Cuba's hotels has restrained tourism growth

KENYA & EGYPT
NILE CRUISE & LUXOR - 18 JULY 97

7nights Royal Memphis (FB)	from £299	Optimal Extra Week on Luxor (FB)	from £49
7nights Nile Star (FB)	from £399

Flights from Gatwick every Friday.

MOMBASA BEACH
14nights Travellers' Trail (S) HB from £479 from £519
14nights Neptune Village (S) AI from £639 from £679

Flights from Gatwick 20th July only and Manchester 15 & 22nd July.
For competitively priced holidays, ask your Travel Agent to contact Somak Holidays.

Somak HOLIDAYS
ABTA AITO ATOL358 0181 423 3000

TAKE A SUMMER BREAK WITH BRITAIN'S LARGEST GROUP OF 3 & 4 STAR HOTELS

- Summer Saver Leisure Breaks from £94.50 per person for 3 nights half board.*
- 2 night Getaway Breaks from £85 per person half board.
- Over 220 quality 3 and 4 star independently owned hotels in the best choice of leisure locations in Britain.
- More hotels with swimming pools than any other hotel group.
- Over 90 restaurants awarded AA rosettes for excellent food.
- Best choice of hotels with on site golf.
- Children stay & travel free.*

*See brochure for full details.
Reservations open: Sunday 11am to 4pm, Monday - Friday 9am to 8pm, Saturday 9am to 6pm.

SEE YOUR TRAVEL AGENT OR CALL 0345 747474 NOW

HOLIDAY price war

A DISCOUNTING war has broken out among travel agents following poor sales of summer 1998 holidays.

Thomas Cook is offering 12 per cent off holidays booked by this Monday after figures showed half of all bookings for next summer were for May and June. Dido Harding, head of retail marketing, said: "People just don't feel comfortable about booking next year's holiday until they have returned from this year's."

The Thomas Cook offer was immediately bettered, however, by rivals Going Places and Lum Poly, which are offering 13 per cent off on certain holidays.

The discount battle follows the earliest-ever launch, in May, of brochures for the following summer. But only 180,000 holidays were sold in May, less than 2 per cent of capacity.

HOLIDAYMAKERS heading for the Florida beaches or skiers travelling to Colorado face a double tax whammy this winter.

The UK is to double Air Passenger Duty from £10 to £20 for flights outside the EU on November 1.

And now the USA is planning to quintuple its Airport Taxes from $6 to $31 (£19) from October 1. Visitors to America already pay £18 per person in US customs and security charges.

The charges, which are absorbed into tour operator or airline prices, will mean 10 per cent of holiday prices consisting solely of taxes, according to Airtours.

MORE BRITONS are going to Goa this winter than Majorca or France, according to Thomas Cook figures.

The company sold nearly 21,000 winter holidays to India by the end of May, making it the fifth most popular destination behind the Canaries, mainland Spain, Florida and the Caribbean. Overall, sales are up by a third year-on-year.

Paying the price for a seaview

From Dr Malcolm Wallis, Leeds.

WHEN booking an Airtours holiday to Gran Canaria, the salesgirl in the Going Places travel agency stated that a seaview was included in the price. But at the hotel, I was told I could only have a seaview if I paid a not inconsiderable supplement. When I complained, the statement was denied and they referred me to a form I had signed which showed the seaview as a request which could not be guaranteed.

I did not, and would never interpret "cannot be guaranteed" to mean "will not be provided unless extra money is paid". It seems to me the wording is misleading.

DR WELLES signed a form requesting a seaview and balcony. But Airtours did not have any seaview rooms in its allocation at the Melia Tamarindos in San Agustin.

Going Places admits that when it receives special requests, it uses a standard form and had no on-screen information to indicate no seaview rooms were available.

"It would be very difficult to find out what allocation of rooms each operator has in every case," said a spokeswoman. A spokeswoman for the hotel said it is common practice to charge a supplement for a room with a view. The rate offered was probably the public rate, she added, which would be higher than that negotiated with Airtours.

Write to: Letters, Travel Department, The Times, 1 Pennington Street, London E1 9XN, or fax 0171-752 5124.

How are you Faring?

off our Fast Ferry brochure rates to Belgium with the new EURO ECONOMY FARE!

SAVE FROM £49 TO £119 for a car and five people, depending when you sail.

Bookings must be made 30 days in advance. Other conditions apply.

Call 0345 16 00 00 for details or contact your travel agent.

Holyman sally Ferries
We sail to please

EURO • ECONOMY • FARE

Gain £££'s

off our Fast Ferry brochure rates to Belgium with the new EURO ECONOMY FARE!

SAVE FROM £49 TO £119 for a car and five people, depending when you sail.

Bookings must be made 30 days in advance. Other conditions apply.

Call 0345 16 00 00 for details or contact your travel agent.

Holyman sally Ferries
We sail to please

EURO • ECONOMY • FARE

ORIANA FOR JUST £345*

(WELL, THEY SAY STRANGER THINGS HAPPEN AT SEA.)

This October, you can sample the delights of Britain's favourite superliner without splashing out.

That's when Oriana sets off on one of our special short break cruises. It's a 3-night affair, visiting Cherbourg and Zeebrugge for a day out in historic Bruges.

And next year sees another six such cruises, giving you a great opportunity to experience cruising at its best.

Fancy trying out our latest superliner, Arcadia? We'll welcome you aboard for as little as £295.

Between them, our superliners will be visiting ports-of-call such as La Rochelle, Lisbon, Amsterdam, Guernsey and La Coruna in Spain. Fill in the coupon or phone 0990 726 726 for details.

Once you've enjoyed a few days of P&O pampering, we're sure you'll want to come back for more.

*Price per adult for an inside 4 berth cabin cruise no. 789.
Price per adult for an inside 4 berth cabin cruise no. 818.

For a brochure, post coupon to P&O Cruises Brochure Services, 100 Victoria, Bristol BS1 3YX

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
POSTCODE _____

KAL14 P&O Cruises

Exclusive offer for a Superbike race day

Page 5

Car with a sting faces a test in traffic

Page 8

SATURDAY JULY 12 1997

BK

Bride and vroom at the hot rod wedding

For the 12,000 fans who turned out for the 1997 National Hot Rod world championship, the oval circuit became that bit more holy this week, when Neil Rowe and Angie French became "Mr and Mrs Hot Rod" on the track.

Neil, the formula chairman, and Angie, the club secretary, got off the grid of married life with a blessing from Methodist minister Andrew Roberts, the only clergyman in the National Hot Rod supporters' club.

The service at Foxhall Stadium, Ipswich, followed a civic wedding in a register office, but to the couple the race track ceremony was the "real thing".

In full bridal gown, followed by a "train" of National Hot Rods, and with Wagner's wedding march playing

Race fans roared as cupid took pole position: Ruth Gledhill on a high-octane romance through the public address system, Angie, blonde and buxom, motored onto the grid in style, bedecked in ribbons and resplendent on the pace car.

They exchanged rings and pledged eternal love "for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health", before their own lap of honour in front of cheering crowds as 33 hot rods lined up for the start.

Originally inspired by American stock cars, National Hot Rod is a non-contact sport on quarter-mile ovals, with about 25 race meetings a year. There are about 100 regular racers in Britain who spend £25,000 to buy and assemble one of the custom-built Ford Fiestas, Peugeot 205s or Renault Clios, and a further £10,000 to run them for a season.

Sunday's world championship, televised by Sky, was won for a record-breaking fifth time by Northern Ireland's Ormond Christie, in his Fiesta. England's Dave Longhurst, in his Renault Clio, was second.

Each of the 75 laps takes about 14 seconds, at an average 60mph, but with maximum speeds reaching 90mph. Ramming and bumping are banned and persistent offenders heavily penalised.

company. Narowe Executive Cars, is racing coordinator for the sport. Both he and Mr Roberts, minister of Kingswinford Methodist church in the West Midlands, have been watching National Hot Rod since the age of eight.

By contrast, the new Mrs Rowe was a newcomer to the sport. Employed as a temp by Neil four years ago, their eyes met across a crowded desk and it was love at first sight. And in loving him, she fell in love with his sport.

A wedding on the track during Avon Tyres and Kent Cam's "Spedweekend" was the only way to ensure their family and many friends — drivers, mechanics and race fans — could be present, while at the same time allowing the couple to be there for the key date in the hot rod racing calendar.

Alan Copps discovers how the Silverstone home team plans to be in the winner's frame tomorrow

Jordan's eye-view of the British GP lead

This is the driver's-eye view of Silverstone: the kerb looms as Giancarlo Fisichella hurls his golden Jordan round the team's home circuit where the RAC British Grand Prix takes place tomorrow.

With the help of some clever gadgetry the Italian star pressed the button himself for this unique photograph during a practice session last week in which the Jordan team, with two of the youngest drivers on the grand prix circuit, laid down a challenge to their rivals.

Allen Ivie, who, teammate Ralf Schumacher, 22, who, had already set the fastest time at Silverstone this year, proved the quickest driver in that test session, with a lap of 1 minute 27.71 seconds, matched only by Heinz-Harald Frentzen in his Williams and eight hundredths of a second faster than his elder brother and champion, Michael Schumacher.

Paul Fischella was four tenths of a second behind him.

The Jordan team have already been on the podium twice this year; Fischella, 24, came third in Canada last month and Ralf Schumacher achieved the same result in Argentina. There is nowhere they would rather score their first grand prix victory than Silverstone.

100 yards at Silverstone, where their factory stands just 50 yards from the circuit.

far we have come since then, but it is a good excuse to recall those early days," says Eddie Jordan.

The team has already pulled off one surprise in this crucial week of the season by announcing they have signed a two-year deal to use the powerful Mugen-Honda engine from next year, when Peugeot, which has provided their power for the last three years, transfers its allegiance to the all-French Prost team.

He adds: "The surface is a little mired, as the re-surfaced areas have lots of grip and the other areas do not. Since our aerodynamic package is good, however, we do not have a problem on areas which lack grip. I'd love to win at Silverstone and I really do think the car's quick enough."

To achieve that, the Jordans with their vivid snake-embellished noses will have to get up into the furious battle between Michael Schumacher and Jacques Villeneuve in the Williams. That's exactly what Ralf Schumacher did in the last grand prix in France when he qualified third on the grid, although he could only manage sixth in the race.

Eddie Jordan is a bit more

Despite all those pressures, the team's research and development technicians Paul Thompson and Gary North, known as "gadget", found time to help Times photographer Marc Aspland take the photograph above. It's exactly the sort of shot you'll be able to select from any driver in the race on your own television if the ambitious plans to float Formula One on the stock market and expand its interactive television coverage come to fruition.

But while the aerodynamic video cameras that provide the usual in-car shots sit neatly into brackets which all teams have to provide, a special carbon-fibre bracket had to be fabricated for Aspland's camera. "We were a bit worried it might get pulled off in the slipstream, but fortunately it survived," said North. Still things have come a long way since Jack Brabham had to carry the whole photographic kit on his helmet.

- £2800 =

7. 7. CLEVER CARS FROM JAPAN

THE GRAND MOVE 0800 239 239

The 1.7 litre Grand Tourer, D-Drive and Intelligent Airbag + ABS, air conditioning + alloy wheels + front and rear electric windows + leather trim + 3 years unlimited mileage warranty are all standard – just £13,500 on the street. The Renault Megane Scenic RT 1.6e with these features = over £2,800 more @ £16,302.

PRICES CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS AND INCLUDE NUMBER PLATES, DELIVERY AND 12 MONTHS' ROAD FUND LICENCE

DAIHATSU

Formula One tyre changes take around seven seconds, so why does it involve an hour's frustration when mere mortals perform the same task?

Going spare over tyre changes

One of life's great mysteries will unfold at Silverstone tomorrow when ordinary motorists such as myself gaze in awe at the television and wonder why it is that what takes a Formula One team seven seconds can occupy at least an hour of my time.

Changing a wheel on a Formula One racing car can now be achieved in the blink of an eye. Indeed, the procedure is so rapid and so predictable that one wonders why on earth ITV feels the need to have a commentator in the pits, who can scarcely describe the procedure before it is over. It is like having a doctor give a commentary on a flu jab.

There is no greater gap in car development than that between wheel changing in motor racing and wheel changing in normal

DRIVEN TO DISTRACTION

Peter Barnard

motoring. A mere mortal forced off the road by a puncture has no assistance and is quite likely to be encumbered by disadvantages not commonly encountered in a Ferrari. Indeed, the thought occurs that in the weeks between Formula One races, Murray Walker could be employed offering commentary from a helicopter as various drivers rub their chins at the sight of a flat tyre.

Walker: Well, they seem to be going along the A303 quite nicely, probably headed for Devon. no they aren't, they're in a lay-by, oh dear oh dear, that looks like a flat right front, yes, no, that's...

Martin Brundle: That's a flat left rear, Murray...

Walker: Absolutely right, what a shame, what a way to start a holiday. The driver's out of the car, what's he doing Martin?

Brundle: He's kicking the tyre Murray. I'm looking through the binoculars and that seems to be quite a mix of rubber, a Goodyear right front, a Bridgestone left front, something cheap and nasty right rear. I can't see the one he's punctured.

Walker: Well, what we can see is a pretty interesting procedure, clock's already showing 2 mins 10 secs, and — yes, I thought they might — the mother, the daughter, the son and the dog are out of the car and taking the picnic table off the roof rack so clearly they're grabbing the chance to take on food...

Brundle: This is good thinking, the family clearly had a one-stop strategy in mind so they're making the tyre stop into a food stop as well, oh dear, I see it's the usual car boot design where the spare tyre is underneath all the luggage.

Walker: Look at that! He's put the three suitcases and the dog basket on the ground behind him so as to get at the spare but in lifting the tyre he's stepped backwards on to the dog, which had climbed into the basket, oh dear oh dear.

Brundle: I think the driver's OK Murray but the dog seems pretty angry...

Walker: Unbelievable! You would not credit that a dog could pick up a fully-inflated tyre let alone...

Brundle: Let alone bite right through the rubber, Murray.

Walker: The force of the air escaping has thrown the dog clean over the hedge and there seems to be a, is that a cow?

Brundle: Judged by its head-down running stance Murray I would say that's a bull.

Walker: My goodness it is a bull and it's picked up the dog on its horns and has jumped over the hedge and landed on the, has it, I can't quite...

Brundle: It's landed on the car Murray.

Walker: Well fortunately the wife and children had set up the picnic table some distance from the car, probably to avoid hearing the language that often accompanies a puncture, but now the driver has a bit more of a problem than a mere flat.

Brundle: He's got a write off, Murray.

Walker: It's a sad end and although I'm the last to condone violence against animals you can understand why he's attacking the bull with the wheel brace.

Brundle: Not much else to use it for, Murray.

Walker: Unbelievable.

Links between road and racetrack are stronger than ever as carmakers seek faster results, says Vaughan Freeman

Engineers tweak the Stewart-Ford: Improvements increasingly end up on road cars

Former racer Jackie Stewart with the new Ford Puma coupé he was involved in developing: it's one of the best-steering cars now made, he says

Diesel Ford Transits will be scarce on the grid of tomorrow's British Grand Prix at Silverstone, but the battered plumber's van that cut you up yesterday has more in common with Formula One than you think.

Similarly the blue-ovalled Puma looks cute and sporty, but its 125mph top speed is puny against the 200mph-plus monsters also powered by Ford engines. Yet, like the Transit, the Puma shares its automotive genes with its FI relatives. Even down to its chief test driver, three-times world champion Jackie Stewart.

The modern Transit uses "drive by wire" grand prix technology which gets rid of the cable between engine and accelerator. Instead a dab on the throttle electronically tells the engine management computer how much fuel to pump into the engine.

The Puma's aluminium engine, anti-lock braking system, sleek aerodynamic shape, electronic engine management and engine computer systems, and brake-activated traction control system to prevent wheel-spin, all derive from developments on the track.

The gap is closing between grand prix and road car technology. Every year carmakers spend tens of millions of pounds on Formula One, and they want their money back. Developments trackside are finding their way on to road cars faster than ever. Electronically controlled anti-lock brakes and traction control first saw the light of day in Formula One test cars and though both are now banned by the racing authorities, have become commonplace in cars driven by millions.

Tyrrone Johnson, Ford's European Motorsport Technical Director, speaking to CAR 97 this week while at Silverstone for the Ford-powered Stewart GP team's tyre testing session, said: "In the past motorsport has been primarily a marketing gim-

Why the Transit in front has Formula One parts mick, a way of making our cars sell.

"In the last 18 months we have decided to try to get more out of the motorsport deal, to get technology back that will help us in other areas.

"At the same time as Ford is helping the Stewart team, the link helps us identify new and faster ways of doing things, not just ways of improving specific components on our production cars but also ways of accelerating our entire car programmes."

Being able to design and develop new cars for customers faster is a key area, says Johnson: the competition, particularly the Japanese, can bring out a new car from scratch in two years.

"Engineers in Formula One are constantly coming up with new ideas, and all these things are considered in terms of whether or not we can adapt them on road cars."

Though active suspension is now banned in FI, it was developed by Ford during its partnership with Benetton and was introduced in limited numbers on the new Mondeo in Germany when the car was first launched.

In Formula One, the days of mechanics puzzling over a spluttering engine armed with wrenches and spanners is long gone. Instead white-overalled computer boffins just plug into the racing car's memory chip to see what is wrong. These chips, now feature on cars like the Mondeo and Ka. Dealership technicians also plug into the car's engine to see if there are any problems.

It is a two-way street. When Ford launched its current Formula One programme in 1985, its early racers adapted an electronic engine-management system then used in Ford's road cars. Thanks to the demands of racing the unit has shrunk to a third of its size and a fraction of the weight, become far more powerful and, as a new generation engine management unit, has found its way back to roadgoing cars.

Johnson says: "We are helping Stewart Grand Prix to develop a more aerodynamic car for the track, and what we learn at the same time goes back to our people to help them develop more aerodynamic road cars."

Bruce Cambern, head of Ford's worldwide race programme, says: "In Formula One every added ounce of weight saps acceleration, and every extra cubic inch of volume adds drag which slows the car."

He first worked with Ford on the original Mondeo, and formed an instant rapport with the company's vice president of small and medium vehicle engineering, Richard Parry-Jones, as Stewart sensed that the Welshman was someone who understood his point of view.

"My concerns are centred around the issue of driveability — the way the car communicates to its driver through the steering, the accelerator and the brakes," Stewart says. "The importance of this area of vehicle development" isn't widely appreciated but Richard understands it perfectly. Whether he's driven the car or not, I feel that I can pick up the phone and say: 'Richard, I really feel strongly about this,' and know that he'll get the job done."

"Once you launch a car and once you've given it your blessing, you can't take it back — it has to be right. To achieve that, it's no good for me to be merely a critic. I need to get personally involved."

Stewart has been driving Puma prototypes and pre-production models for the past three years, mostly at Ford's proving ground in Belgium. Though pleased with the end result, he is quick to point out that much of the groundwork had already been done.

"In the little Ford Ka, we'd already created what, in my view, is the single best steering car in the world," Stewart said. "Interesting, isn't it, that most of the good steering cars are the least expensive ones? This is a trend I think we've continued with Puma."

"When I was racing, I always wanted a car that worked with me so that I could drive consistently right on the limit. That way, I was able to repeat lap record speeds with ease and creativity."

"I've driven Pumas in various configurations with different engines in Belgium and that's a balance we've always been able to reach — and not only in terms of steering. In things like accelerator pedal modulation and progressive braking, we've used the same approach."

Last year he spent more than 135 days on test tracks in Europe, the United States and South America, developing the superminis, family hatchbacks and sports coupes you will be buying in this century.

But the RAC's involvement is not restricted to the track. There will be scores of patrols, under the control of Norman Winchester, the RAC's special events manager, on hand to help spectators. And before the 200mph Formula One cars go out on the track each day, the 27 vehicles of the RAC's Centenary Fleet, ranging from a 1912 Phelion and Moore motorcycle to a brand new orange-painted Transit will parade around the circuit.

RACMSA has overseen the redesign of the track, which will make this year's race faster, and provides 1,200 flag marshals, track safety officials, observ-

PARTNERSHIP AS OLD AS BRITISH ROAD RACING

It's a case of plus ça change for the British Grand Prix. The official title is now the RAC British Grand Prix, thanks to sponsorship from RAC Motoring Services, which is celebrating its centenary this year, writes Alan Capps.

The first race in Britain in 1926 over a pseudo-road circuit at Brooklands was known as the RAC Grand Prix. It was won by a Delage at an average speed of 71.6mph. In 1948 when Silverstone staged its first race it was called the RAC International Grand Prix and in 1950 the RAC British Grand Prix was the first event in the new World Drivers' Championship.

The revived title perpetuates a link with motorsport that has existed since the first races of any kind were held in this country. The RAC Motor Sports Association is the governing body for

RAC
British Grand Prix
Silverstone 1997

Britain. "We had been organising the Grand Prix for a long time but you would hardly have known," says Jonathan Ashman, director of major events and marketing for RACMSA. "If Silverstone is the producer then we are the director, the sporting authority that deals directly with the FIA, the world governing body."

RACMSA has overseen the redesign of the track, which will make this year's race faster, and provides 1,200 flag marshals, track safety officials, observers and scrutineers and a medical team. "It's a ten-month process selecting all these people. We need the best and most experienced in the country and they all have to be chosen by January and undergo special training. They get paid expenses for lunch and so on but otherwise it's all voluntary," says Ashman.

But the RAC's involvement is not restricted to the track. There will be scores of patrols, under the control of Norman Winchester, the RAC's special events manager, on hand to help spectators. And before the 200mph Formula One cars go out on the track each day, the 27 vehicles of the RAC's Centenary Fleet, ranging from a 1912 Phelion and Moore motorcycle to a brand new orange-painted Transit will parade around the circuit.

ROUTES TO SILVERSTONE

The Formula One cars might reach 185mph at Silverstone but visitors will be lucky to do 50mph on their way to and from the grand prix, which is once again a sell-out, with crowds of 90,000 expected.

To help readers keep moving, CAR 97 offers suggested routes to the public car parks and for centre pass holders. The organisers recommend arriving at night, when the car parks will remain open and catering will be provided. The circuit opens at 8am today and 8am on race day tomorrow.

Route for Abbey, Luffield, Woodcote, Pit Straight, Startline and Copse grandstand ticket holders and spectator areas:

■ FROM the south-west: A34, crossing M40 at junction 15a, join A43. Follow signs for Silverstone and north stands; enter at West Entrance 9 or 11.

■ FROM M1 north: Leave the motorway at junction 18 and follow the A5, then the A43, south or leave at junction 15a to join the A43. Follow signs for Silverstone and south stands; enter at West Entrance 9 or 11.

■ FROM M1 south: Leave M1 at junction 11, join A505 Dunstable, A5 Towcester and A43. Follow signs for Silverstone and north stands; enter at West Entrance 9 or 11.

Centre Pass holders should follow the routes above and then from the south-west follow signs for public car parks and centre passes; from the north and south, follow the signs for Silverstone and north stands, then follow signs for centre passes; enter at West Entrance 4.

Secrets of grand prix cars' fast-f

John is 1.5

IN THE TYRRELL PIT - THE SECONDS WHEN THE RACE CAN BE WON OR LOST

COUNTDOWN TO THE MOST FRANTIC TEN SECONDS IN MOTORSPORT
The Tyrrell team knows the strategy of each driver - Mike Salo and Jos Verstappen - during the race and on which lap both are scheduled to stop. But that can change in minutes during the race - if it rains, or the car develops a fault. The team manager might also decide on a change depending on how well opposition cars are performing.

If a driver is being held up by a slower car, the team will bring him in early for a change of tyres and splash of fuel to avoid a needless confrontation. A clear track ahead gives the driver the chance to stay out on the circuit for a few quick laps to gain valuable time. If the safety car comes out, it is important to pit early because Tyrrell's car will be able to catch the procession behind the circuit car quickly.

- 1 -15.18 SEC
Tyrrell's team manager tells pit crew that Jos Verstappen is setting the signal this time round, pit crew come out of the garage and get ready
- 2 -14.18 SEC
The driver goes past pit board and is told by his pit board to take on tyres and fuel. At same time, the radio signals: "Box, Jos, Box". He acknowledges and warns pit crew of special repairs through crash damage or faults
- 3 -13.18 SEC
Team receives countdown from the team manager
- 4 -12.18 SEC
Tyre covers are removed
- 5 -11.18 SEC
Verstappen gets call: "Box, Jos, Box" to enter pit lane
- 6 -10.18 SEC
Verstappen warned: "Speed limit". Driver presses the pre-programmed speed limiter before he crosses the entrance to the pit lane. To him: "Jos is in"
- 7 -09.18 SEC
The pit signal board is turned around to show the location of the team for the driver. The driver arrives at the pits and aims to stop on the marks on the ground as shown by the team
- STOPPED
- 8 -08.18 SEC
Guns (air-hammers) are in place on wheel nuts plus front jack
- 9 -07.18 SEC
Jacks in position and car raised
- 10 -06.18 SEC
Fuel hose connected, red light indicates fuel is flowing
- 11 -05.18 SEC
Brake board (lollipop) displayed to driver and wheels are off
- 12 -04.18 SEC
New wheels on
- 13 -03.18 SEC
Guns are removed, each wheelman raises his hand to signal all clear and jacks lowered
- 14 -02.18 SEC
Flint gear board is shown, driver changes to first gear
- 15 -01.18 SEC
Green light comes on to confirm pre-measured quantity of fuel delivered and hose disconnected
- 16 -00.18 SEC
Lollipop raised, but someone always still sucking to speed limit

WHO DOES WHAT IN THE PITLANE

Pit crews look specialised, but in the super-heated world of Formula One, everybody has to pitch in - from driving the huge transporters to making the tea. Kurt Kent, Bob Foster, Ian Hunter and Rob Kiddle all drive the giant articulated trucks to the grands prix, then switch to fireproof overalls in the pit lane. Kurt supports the fuel hose pumping petrol into the Tyrrell F1 car at the rate of two gallons a second. Rob is also on the fuel team, Ian and Bob operate the jacks. Brian Hardy, a gearbox engineer, attaches the fuel nozzle but Nigel Slater, chief mechanic, and Ted Bowyer, electronics, find themselves relegated from top head office jobs to cleaning air filters and wiping visors. Chris White, head of electronics, turns Lollipop Man, holding the car until the pit stop is safely completed.

TYRES

The team is entitled to nine sets of slick tyres to last throughout the whole race weekend. Before qualifying, the team must select which compound it will use for the remainder of the weekend. The team used 445 sets of tyres during 1996. Tyres are pre-heated to between 60° and 90° c by electric blankets, to get to race temperature before the car hits the circuit.

FUEL

A pre-measured quantity of fuel is delivered into the car under 1.1 bar of pressure at 12 litres per second - about two gallons - per second. An average fuel quantity for a two-stop strategy would be 75 litres per stop. The fuel in the dispensing unit is measured in millimetres and then converted to kilograms. Fuel is delivered in millimetres because it is heat-sensitive. When the temperature of fuel increases, so does its volume, so inaccuracies develop. The team used 37,000 litres of fuel during 1996.

Secrets of grand prix stars' fast-food girls

Shona Crawford
Poole tries life with the stomach pitstop teams

Formula 1 drivers are kept lean and mean on the low-fat regimes of muesli and pasta decreed by their personal dieticians and fitness trainers. Snake-hipped, bull-necked, and rigorously disciplined they may be, but these fear-somely fit young men share the same cravings for comfort food as lesser mortals.

When chocolate, ice-cream and brownies emerge from the kitchen of Marlboro's VIP hospitality unit after the race, it is an open secret that their destination is Michael Schumacher's mobile home. Schumacher's Ferrari team-mate, Eddie Irvine dips into the fridge for a well-chilled Twix or KitKat and has a legendary thirst for tea.

World champion Damon Hill has a secret stash of fun-size Dairy Milk bars in the Arrows kitchen, and the Brazilian Arrows driver Pedro Diniz is famous for "eating Parmesan with anything".

Their little weaknesses are no secret to the girls who cook for the teams during the grand prix season. The caterers are as essential a part of the Formula One circus as the technicians, mechanics, sponsors and team bosses. This weekend, it is the British contingent who will be on home territory.

No team is more experienced than the girls from Wings, ex-British Airways hostess Sally Hart's catering company, which has been on the road since 1981. While the drivers breakfast on fruit and muesli, the mechanics start their day with a fry-up.

In the pits, lunch is pizzas, sandwiches and stickies, while the teams' guests eat "London restaurant-style food", says Hart, who took a chef from her Riverside Cafe in Ware out to Monaco. "It is modern food, light, fresh and delicious."

This season, Hart's girls are

Teams cater for everything from corporate hospitality to drivers' comfort snacks feeding Ferrari's guests for sponsors Marlboro, and the Arrows team and their VIPs. "It is the hardest work you'll ever do, and the best job you'll ever have," says Kate Haberson, who runs the Ferrari operation. "The Formula 1 catering operation is as finely tuned as the cars."

The routine is well polished. Caterers arrive at the circuit on the Tuesday before race day. Their mobile kitchens and support vehicles are driven to the European circuits by crews who will double as barmen and waiters. The cooks fly in.

"In Europe it is fine because we are totally equipped, we have ample fridges and freezers and everything in the kitchen is just so," Haberson explains. "But when we go long haul, we have field kitchens, and it is more like camping."

For the European races, the catering operation is more polished. "When we arrive at the circuit on Tuesday we have a quick clean-down of the vehicles and check where the best markets and supermarkets are. We do our menus then go out and have some dinner, see who is around."

Wednesday's big shopping expedition is followed by pasty making, cake baking, boiling stock and preparing anything else that can be done in advance.

By Thursday morning Haberson and her six-strong team are washing salads and stripping chickens. Eddie Irvine wanders in for a quiet cuppa, and first of the sponsors arrives for lunch.

The pace heats up on Friday, with people snatching meals between the practice sessions. There's a big trade in afternoon tea - even the Italians pop round for tea now.

Saturday's routine is similar. The numbers who will want breakfast, a quick espresso, lunch, tea or dinner ebb and flow with practice sessions. Sunday, race day, is the climax for drivers, sponsors and spectators. There is less pressure on the hospitality units, and before the race is finished, they are stealthily packing up.

So is it a glamorous life? Kate and Sally grin in unison. "You have to have girls who are fairly mature, who can handle the attention," says Sally. "It is like bees round a honeypot when someone new comes in. It can be quite disheartening for the other girls if suddenly the boys don't want you to take the ice-lollies down to the pits because they want the new girl to do it."

Travelling life means meals abroad can be more basic

A TIMES NEWSPAPERS COMPETITION

Play Fantasy Formula One

Prizes worth £40,000

Tomorrow's British Grand Prix is the ninth race in our £40,000 Fantasy Formula One competition and the third of six races offering bonus points to the managers who correctly predict the first three drivers to finish. Heading our leaderboard after the French GP is L Ackland from Guildford. His team, Aston O, has 5,919 points.

TO ENTER If you have not yet entered a team into our £40,000 competition use the panel, below right, to make three selections from each of the four groups and call 0891 405 001 (+44 990 100 311) outside the UK.

THE PRIZES The manager with the best team score after the European Grand Prix on October 26, will win the first prize of £25,000 courtesy of our sponsor Marlboro World Championship team. Prizes of £10,000 and £5,000 will go to two runners-up. The manager with the most points in the British Grand Prix will win a trip for two to the Belgian Grand Prix courtesy of BAC Sport. The prize includes return travel on Eurostar and a three-night stay in Liege. The runner-up will get a Sony PlayStation and Formula One game.

TRANSFERS You can change up to four selections before the German Grand Prix by calling 0891 555 994 (+44 990 100 394 ex UK) before noon Thursday, July 24. Your new team must have three selections from each of groups A, B, C and D. The first three drivers you select will be your prediction for the Belgian GP bonus points.

CHECK YOUR SCORE Check your score and position after the British Grand Prix on 0891 884 648 (+44 990 100 348 ex UK) with your 10-digit PIN number. Lines will open on Wednesday.

OUR LEADERBOARD AFTER THE FRENCH GRAND PRIX
POS	TEAM NAME	MANAGER NAME	POINTS
1	Aston O	L Ackland	5919
2	What Ales Bunch!	N Rowe	5899
3	The Chequered Flags	A Cooper	5771
4	Petunia	Staszewicz	5763
5	Team Julius II	C Gale	5761
6	Tech-Meisters Racing	B Day	5748
7	Dow Jones 2	J Dowty	5746
8	Waite Racing F1	P Waite	5741
9	Formula Uno	P Tabone	5732
10	Parkhurst Racing	L Danson	5723
11	Dragon Racing	R Davis	5721
12	Verna Superstars	H Coulter	5716
13	John Hunt 23	J Hunt	5713
14	Barnstoneworth 1a	I Lawrenson	5685
15	Gwilt F1	D Gwilt	5683
16	JB 1	I Rock	5623
17	John Hunt 8	J Hunt	5622
18	John Hunt 10	J Hunt	5622
19	John Hunt 29	J Hunt	5613
20	Brit F1	R Balcher	5612
21	Ben Elton	S Nicholls	5612
22	Dustscreen Racing	B Tolerton	5612
23	Bring Back Brindle	M Woodley	5601
24	Team Peter	P Thompson	5600
25	Salanco	S Dankewics	5593

MAKE 3 SELECTIONS FROM EACH OF THESE FOUR GROUPS
The first column of figures in light type after the names shows the Fantasy Formula One French GP race scores, the second column the total competition points so far
DRIVERS GROUP A
01 D Hill	116 379	07 M Hakkinen	25 670
02 M Schumacher	172 1012	08 D Coulthard	112 672
03 J Villeneuve	125 738	09 R Barrichello	40 421
04 E Irvine	140 804	10 H Frentzen	147 830
05 J Alesi	129 845	11 J Herbert	128 690
06 G Berger	0 653	12 M Salo	59 694
DRIVERS GROUP B
13 J Trulli	115 885	19 G Fisichella	118 758
14 J Verstappen	14 585	20 S Nakano	12 485
15 U Katayama	123 515	21 N Fontana	37 704
16 P Diniz	59 440	22 T Marques	-5 490
17 R Rosset	0 0	23 J Magnussen	35 429
18 R Schumacher	124 453	24 V Sospiri	0 0
DRIVERS GROUP C
25 Williams	25 117	31 Arrows	5 -89
26 Ferrari	30 180	32 Sauber	9 82
27 McLaren	0 87	33 Tyrrell	-20 9
28 Benetton	12 130	34 Minardi	6 32
29 Jordan	21 60	35 Stewart	-20 -59
30 Prost	7 81	36 Lola	0 0

FANTASY FORMULA ONE 24 HOUR ENTRY LINE 0891 405 001

0891 calls cost 50p per minute (standard tariffs apply to +44 990 calls).

AUTHORISED DEALERSHIPS AT A GLANCE

IF YOU CANNOT FIND THE VEHICLE YOU DESIRE CONTACT YOUR AUTHORISED DEALER LISTED BELOW

Alfa Romeo WINDSOR - S&T Alfa Romeo Station Road, Station Road, Windsor, Wokingham, Surrey, RG40 3JH. Tel: 01753 805383	Audi LONDON - SCOTT'S AUDI 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	BMW SURREY - Complete of Colindale Ryland Road, Colindale, London NW9 1BA. Tel: 0181 355 0000	JAGUAR CAMBERGEMORE - Michael Petersburg, Ryland Road, Colindale, London NW9 1BA. Tel: 0181 355 0000	LEXUS WINDSOR - S&T Lexus Station Road, Station Road, Windsor, Wokingham, Surrey, RG40 3JH. Tel: 01753 805383	MERCEDES WINDSOR - S&T Mercedes Station Road, Station Road, Windsor, Wokingham, Surrey, RG40 3JH. Tel: 01753 805383	RENAULT WINDSOR - S&T Renault Station Road, Station Road, Windsor, Wokingham, Surrey, RG40 3JH. Tel: 01753 805383	SUZUKI WINDSOR - S&T Suzuki Station Road, Station Road, Windsor, Wokingham, Surrey, RG40 3JH. Tel: 01753 805383	VOLKSWAGEN WINDSOR - S&T Volkswagen Station Road, Station Road, Windsor, Wokingham, Surrey, RG40 3JH. Tel: 01753 805383
BMW LONDON - SCOTT'S BMW 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	FIAT LONDON - SCOTT'S FIAT 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	HONDA LONDON - SCOTT'S HONDA 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	LOTUS LONDON - SCOTT'S LOTUS 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	MAZDA LONDON - SCOTT'S MAZDA 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	PORSCHE LONDON - SCOTT'S PORSCHE 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	SAAB LONDON - SCOTT'S SAAB 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	SEAT LONDON - SCOTT'S SEAT 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484	VOLKSWAGEN LONDON - SCOTT'S VOLKSWAGEN 214 Pavilion Road, London SW14 OAK. Sales Tel: 0171 726 2157 Services Tel: 0171 726 2484

OVER 1 THIRD OF TIMES READERS BOUGHT A USED CAR IN THE LAST YEAR.
THE TIMES IS THE FASTEST GROWING DAILY NEWSPAPER
(Source: NRS Aug - Jan '97)

BMW 328i 1996, 1998, 2 door, auto, sunroof, electric windows, spoiler, FM/WSH, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE May 96N, Arctic silver/black, auto, A/C, air, air, 2 yr wty. 33,000 miles, superb condition. £23,500. Tel: 0181 8810510	BMW 328i CONV 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471
BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471	BMW 328i COUPE 1996, dark red, 2 door, sports suspension, sports wheels, CD, stereo, electric windows, sunroof, always garaged, perfect. 33K. £7,750. Tel: 01923 835 471

BMW AUTHORIZED DEALERS

BMW Authorised Dealers (now on line).

BMW Approved Used Cars are available only from BMW Authorised Dealerships, a selection of which are shown below. For more information and details of your nearest dealer, call 0800 325600 or www.bmw.co.uk

Park Lane 90 reasons not to buy a new car on August 1. 90A 1994 BMW 3 Series E36, 1.8i, 16V, 170hp, 170,000 miles, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 2679, 2680, 2681, 2682, 2683, 2684, 2685, 2686, 2687, 2688, 2689, 2690, 2691, 2692, 2693, 2694, 2695, 2696, 2697, 2698, 2699, 2700, 2701, 2702, 2703, 2704, 2705, 2706, 2707, 2708, 2709, 2710, 2711, 2712, 2713, 2714, 2715, 2716, 2717, 2718, 2719, 2720, 2721, 2722, 2723, 2724, 2725, 2726, 2727, 2728, 2729, 2730, 2731, 2732, 2733, 2734, 2735, 2736, 2737, 2738, 2739, 2740, 2741, 2742, 2743, 2744, 2745, 2746, 2747, 2748, 2749, 2750, 2751, 2752, 2753, 2754, 2755, 2756, 2757, 2758, 2759, 2760, 2761, 2762, 2763, 2764, 2765, 2766, 2767, 2768, 2769, 2770, 2771, 2772, 2773, 2774, 2775, 2776, 2777, 2778, 2779, 2780, 2781, 2782, 2783, 2784, 2785, 2786, 2787, 2788, 2789, 2790, 2791, 2792, 2793, 2794, 2795, 2796, 2797, 2798, 2799, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2803, 2804, 2805, 2806, 2807, 2808, 2809, 2810, 2811, 2812, 2813, 2814, 2815, 2816, 2817, 2818, 2819, 2820, 2821, 2822, 2823, 2824, 2825, 2826, 2827, 2828, 2829, 2830, 2831, 2832, 2833, 2834, 2835, 2836, 2837, 2838, 2839, 2840, 2841, 2842, 2843, 2844, 2845, 2846, 2847, 2848, 2849, 2850, 2851, 2852, 2853, 2854, 2855, 2856, 2857, 2858, 2859, 2860, 2861, 2862, 2863, 2864, 2865, 2866, 2867, 2868, 2869, 2870, 2871, 2872, 2873, 2874, 2875, 2876, 2877, 2878, 2879, 2880, 2881, 2882, 2883, 2884, 2885, 2886, 2887, 2888, 2889, 2890, 2891, 2892, 2893, 2894, 2895, 2896, 2897, 2898, 2899, 2900, 2901, 2902, 2903, 2904, 2905, 2906, 2907, 2908, 2909, 2910, 2911, 2912, 2913, 2914, 2915, 2916, 2917, 2918, 2919, 2920, 2921, 2922, 2923, 2924, 2925, 2926, 2927, 2928, 2929, 2930, 2931, 2932, 2933, 2934, 2935, 2936, 2937, 2938, 2939, 2940, 2941, 2942, 2943, 2944, 2945, 2946, 2947, 2948, 2949, 2950, 2951, 2952, 2953, 2954, 2955, 2956, 2957, 2958, 2959, 2960, 2961, 2962, 2963, 2964, 2965, 2966, 2967, 2968, 2969, 2970, 2971, 2972, 2973, 2974, 2975, 2976, 2977, 2978, 2979, 2980, 2981, 2982, 2983, 2984, 2985, 2986, 2987, 2988, 2989, 2990, 2991, 2992, 2993, 2994, 2995, 2996, 2997, 2998, 2999, 3000, 3001, 3002, 3003, 3004, 3005, 3006, 3007, 3008, 3009, 3010, 3011, 3012, 3013, 3014, 3015, 3016, 3017, 3018, 3019, 3020, 3021, 3022, 3023, 3024, 3025, 3026, 3027, 3028, 3029, 3030, 3031, 3032, 3033, 3034, 3035, 3036, 3037, 3038, 3039, 3040, 3041, 3042, 3043, 3044, 3045, 3046, 3047, 3048, 3049, 3050, 3051, 3052, 3053, 3054, 3055, 3056, 3057, 3058, 3059, 3060, 3061, 3062, 3063, 3064, 3065, 3066, 3067, 3068, 3069, 3070, 3071, 3072, 3073, 3074, 3075, 3076, 3077, 3078, 3079, 3080, 3081, 3082, 3083, 3084, 3085, 3086, 3087, 3088, 3089, 3090, 3091, 3092, 3093, 3094, 3095, 3096, 3097, 3098, 3099, 3100, 3101, 3102, 3103, 3104, 3105, 3106, 3107, 3108, 3109, 3110, 3111, 3112, 3113, 3114, 3115, 3116, 3117, 3118, 3119, 3120, 3121, 3122, 3123, 3124, 3125, 3126, 3127, 3128, 3129, 3130, 3131, 3132, 3133, 3134, 3135, 3136, 3137, 3138, 3139, 3140, 3141, 3142, 3143, 3144, 3145, 3146, 3147, 3148, 3149, 3150, 3151, 3152, 3153, 3154, 3155, 3156, 3157, 3158, 3159, 3160, 3161, 3162, 3163, 3164, 3165, 3166, 3167, 3168, 3169, 3170, 3171, 3172, 3173, 3174, 3175, 3176, 3177, 3178, 3179, 3180, 3181, 3182, 3183, 3184, 3185, 3186, 3187, 3188, 3189, 3190, 3191, 3192, 3193, 3194, 3195, 3196, 3197, 3198, 3199, 3200, 3201, 3202, 3203, 3204, 3205, 3206, 3207, 3208, 3209, 3210, 3211, 3212, 3213, 3214, 3215, 3216, 3217, 3218, 3219, 3220, 3221, 3222, 3223, 3224, 3225, 3226, 3227, 3228, 3229, 3230, 3231, 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, 3242, 3243, 3244, 3245, 3246, 3247, 3248, 3249, 3250, 3251, 3252, 3253, 3254, 3255, 3256, 3257, 3258, 3259, 3260, 3261, 3262, 3263, 3264, 3265, 3266, 3267, 3268, 3269, 3270, 3271, 3272, 3273, 3274, 3275, 3276, 3277, 3278, 3279, 3280, 3281, 3282, 3283, 3284, 3285, 3286, 3287, 3288, 3289, 3290, 3291, 3292, 3293, 3294, 3295, 3296, 3297, 3298, 3299, 3300, 3301, 3302, 3303, 3304, 3305, 3306, 3307, 3308, 3309, 3310, 3311, 3312, 3313, 3314, 3315, 3316, 3317, 3318, 3319, 3320, 3321, 3322, 3323, 3324, 3325, 3326, 3327, 3328, 3329, 3330, 3331, 3332, 3333, 3334, 3335, 3336, 3337, 3338, 3339, 3340, 3341, 3342, 3343, 3344, 3345, 3346, 3347, 3348, 3349, 3350, 3351, 3352, 3353, 3354, 3355, 3356, 3357, 3358, 3359, 3360, 3361, 3362, 3363, 3364, 3365, 3366, 3367, 3368, 3369, 3370, 3371, 3372, 3373, 3374, 3375, 3376, 3377, 3378, 3379, 3380, 3381, 3382, 3383, 3384, 3385, 3386, 3387, 3388, 3389, 3390, 3391, 3392, 3393, 3394, 3395, 3396, 3397, 3398, 3399, 3400, 3401, 3402, 3403, 3404, 3405, 3406, 3407, 3408, 3409, 3410, 3411, 3412, 3413, 3414, 3415, 3416, 3417, 3418, 3419, 3420, 3421, 3422, 3423, 3424, 3425, 3426, 3427, 3428, 3429, 3430, 3431, 3432, 3433, 3434, 3435, 3436, 3437, 3438, 3439, 3440, 3441, 3442, 3443, 3444, 3445, 3446, 3447, 3448, 3449, 3450, 3451, 3452, 3453, 3454, 3455, 3456, 3457, 3458, 3459, 3460, 3461, 3462, 3463, 3464, 3465, 3466, 3467, 3468, 3469, 3470, 3471, 3472, 3473, 3474, 3475, 3476, 3477, 3478, 3479, 3480, 3481, 3482, 3483, 3484, 3485, 3486, 3487, 3488, 3489, 3490, 3491, 3492, 3493, 3494, 3495, 3496, 3497, 3498, 3499, 3500, 3501
--

كلنا من لاجل

Only the one on the left comes with a big bill.

Remember as it may seem you can't buy a four door family car for just under £2500. They're called Lada sedans, and they have a lot to offer in terms of reliability, comfort and comprehensive standard features. All have reinforced suspension, power windows, power locks and power mirrors. All are fitted with robust overhead cam engines, heavy duty starter and battery and speed sensitive L-4000, L-5000 and L-5000i. For more details, use the FREEPOST Coupon. For a test drive see below.

All are equipped with locking front seats, with adjustable headrests and side-impact protection and a 21 piece luggage set. And all are protected by Ford and underbody anti-rust corrosion treatment. There are four Lada sedans and two Lada estates to choose from. All just as reliable, robust, spacious and easy to drive. For more details, use the FREEPOST Coupon. For a test drive see below.

LADA Tough Cars. Better Prices.

A new £6000 Mercedes? £5000 Audi? £4000 Volvo?

LADA 1500

Lada's basement prices made buyers extremely wary

Cars like the Samara look as if they're out of the Ark

I've seen the future, and there isn't one: Russia's sad state

Kevin Eason sees Lada back in the USSR

Raven-haired, luscious-lipped, curvaceous... and they were just the assembly line workers.

I walked the assembly lines of the Lada factory plant in Tolyatti, 600 miles from Moscow, on a short journey into a time warp. Row upon row of cars on one of the longest assembly lines I have ever seen were piled up — yet barely moving as workers sat around chatting.

Stranger still to Western eyes used to watching men working at a furious pace in factories such as Nissan's plant at Washington, Tyne and Wear, or the Longbridge factory in Birmingham belonging to Rover, the bulk of the assembly work seemed to be done by young women.

They might have dressed in overalls, but their faces looked ready for a night on the dance floor, their rouge and lipstick glowing under the dingy strip lights of the factory, their hair piled high into the sort of beehive that made Dusty Springfield famous. The average age could have been no more than 19 or 20. While they struggled with dashboards and exhausts, the men sat bored, playing backgammon.

The frantic world of competition simply passed Lada by. The Tolyatti factory opened in 1966, a monument to the Women workers do all the graft on the production lines

Iron curtains for poor Lada

Clean-air rules finish off the basic box of Soviet bolts that many Brits came to love, reports Kevin Eason

This is no time for jokes. After 24 years, selling more than 330,000 cars, Lada has bowed out of the British market, probably for good.

The sturdy Russian car founded their reputation on the sort of gags that would make even executives at Skoda blush, but the cars were durable and carved a niche among the car buyers who believed economical transport was more important than image.

Owners needed to be as durable as the cars to cope with their noise, discomfort and early unreliability.

The cars were miraculously outsold, a testimony to management with the vision of an ostrich, and the investment power of a tramp — which is why they cannot be sold here any longer. In the past, the importer, has not been able to import any new models from Tolyatti, Lada's factory, for six months since the cars failed updated European Community emission tests.

The cantankerous, four-cylinder sedans and hatchbacks were too dirty to be sold in environmentally conscious European markets.

Yet Ladas had created their own small place in British motoring history, and a car that sold at the rate of around 14,500 a year cannot be dismissed merely as a joke.

An estimated 118,000 Ladas are still on Britain's roads, a testimony to the model's durability if not its quality. Even though the marque had the worst reputation for reliability, scoring bottom of J. D. Power/Top Gear survey recently, it was also one of the first to offer a three-year/60,000-mile warranty.

Simple three-box bodies were built from heavier gauge metal than that used in typical European cars, because that was the only steel Russia's mills could provide and AvtoVAZ, Lada's outdated manufacturing company, could work with.

But the cars last and last, they just get on with it come hail, rain or snow. "In Russia, we do not always have roads. Often we just have general directions in which we drive," As Vladimir Kaddanikov, a director of AvtoVAZ, put it.

David Bray, sales and marketing director of Motor Vehicle Imports, the Luton-based subsidiary which brought the cars into this country, says, "There are people who really do get from A to B in their cars, who are not interested in the frills of motoring. The cars were good business and always had their place so we are very sad that the factory just can't supply us any more."

Popular belief says that Ladas were for losers, but

Cars like the Samara look as if they're out of the Ark

careers and fortunes were built on the business.

Mike Holt started as a car dealer with a Lada franchise in Bolton, Lancashire; now he has three dealerships in Bolton, Blackburn and the Isle of Man, plus another four dealerships with other manufacturers. His garages are among 90 still in business and supplying parts and maintenance to existing owners.

"Without Lada, I could not have moved into other dealerships and be where I am now," says Holt.

But buyers were always going to regard any car which sold for £3,995 with suspicion because it seemed a deal too good to be true. When Lada executives hit on the idea a year ago of giving away a free monolithic Communist ethic of controlled production, but which was to make a version of the Fiat 124. But nothing changed and by 1989, Lada had been left behind.

To say the Tolyatti visit was educational would be an understatement. Assembly shops were dark and messy, redolent of a Victorian sweatshop — if anybody had been sweating. Lines of rusting bodies greeted us at the door before making their painfully slow progress through the huge factory.

The high-speed testing bowl had more craters than Mars. At one point, while a screaming Lada Riva was pounding around the circuit, an old woman jumped over the barrier to make her way for her shift at the factory.

While Britain was adopting revolutionary change on the factory floor, the Russians of Tolyatti were still screwing together basic cars for the common man.

This has left the factory with mounting debts — up to £1.25 billion by the end of last year — and a range of models as up to date as Bill Haley's Rock Around the Clock. General Motors, Honda and Daewoo all looked at the Tolyatti plant with the idea of providing help or investment — and walked away.

Ladas will still be on sale in the old Soviet bloc, but modern Europe is now out of bounds. Tolyatti would need hundreds of millions of pounds of investment to turn it into a modern, vibrant car plant. Its workers would need a culture transplant.

Men are gainfully employed playing backgammon

Home hopes and fellow Yorkshiremen: Carl Fogarty of the Ducati team, left, and Suzuki's James Whitham

Carl's a last-chance hero

British sports fans growing accustomed to watching their heroes flop, could be in for a shock at Brands Hatch next fortnight, where Briton Carl Fogarty is tipped to win at European round of the Superbike World Championship, writes John Naish.

With Tim Henman and Greg Rusedski collapsing at Wimbledon, Damon Hill trailing the Formula One car championship, and things looking grim for the England cricket team, the nation is short of heroes. Fogarty could be our best bet.

He is currently leading the superbike series, which hits the half-way mark at Laguna Seca, in America, tomorrow. And Brands is considered one of his best tracks — he won both superbike races there in 1995 on a Ducati, when he last lifted the World Championship crown.

The Brands Hatch meeting, on August 1-3, provides home race fans with a second chance to see superbike racing this year. While the British round was held at Donington in April, the Brands Hatch event is the European round. This was intended to have been held in Eastern Europe, but political instability prevented this, and the Kent circuit is considered the best alternative venue.

The Superbike World Championship has proved a hit with British racegoers because the bikes are based on the road machines that many fans ride themselves. But that's not to say that the racers are on stock machines — they're heavily modified, with strengthened frames, lightened chassis and tuned engines.

Motorcycle racing fans' interest in the John Naish talks to a Briton who still could become world champ series is greater this year, too, because the competition is close. All the factory-supported riders are still in with a shout. The other big motorcycling world series, the 500cc Grand Prix, has turned into something of a procession, however, with Michael Doohan now having nearly twice as many points as his nearest rival.

Fogarty had a poor season last year with Honda, but now is back with Ducati, and back in front. At each meeting, two races are held, and at the Donington meeting Fogarty came second in the first race, and first in the second.

With typical Yorkshire bluntness, however, Fogarty is sanguine about his chances. "Brands is one of my good tracks, but it's hard to predict because you never really know how it's going to go until you get there," he says. "I don't think that this year's Ducati is as good as the one I raced there two years ago. It's not been that easy to ride, and seems to run out in corners."

And how does he feel at being one of Britain's few remaining bright sporting prospects this year? "I'm still leading the championship, and I only race in order to win," he declares. "I've probably got more motivation than any other sportsman in Britain at the moment."

Rivals, too, are ready to praise Fogarty.

While Chris Herring, of the British-run Castrol Honda team, says its riders, American John Kocinski and New Zealander Aaron Slight, will be his main challengers, "At Brands, Fogarty will take some beating, especially with a huge crowd of around 65,000 cheering him on. After the British Formula One Grand Prix, this will be the best-attended motor sport event in Britain."

Honda will have its own ace up its sleeve, Herring says, as Brands Hatch comes just after Japan's Suzuka eight-hour race, which is so important to the home factories that they dedicate special teams to it. Once the race is over, Honda's leading-edge race equipment is made available to the superbike team. "It's like racing-spares Christmas," he says.

But Fogarty is not the only Yorkshireman in with a chance. James Whitham, riding for the British-run Suzuki team, secured two third places in the last two rounds — the team's first rostrum positions since its creation last year, when Whitham returned to racing after a battle with Hodgkinson's disease. "Brands should be a good track for us," says a team spokesman. "There's that extra incentive when riding in front of the home crowd."

Championship leaders and points after five of 12 rounds: 1 Carl Fogarty (Ducati), 177; 2 John Kocinski, (Castrol Honda) 163; 3 Aaron Slight (Castrol Honda), 153; 4 Simon Crawford (Kawasaki), 113; 5 Pier-Francesco Chili (Ducati) 99.

AN EXCLUSIVE SPORTS OFFER THE TIMES

1997 World Superbike race day at Brands Hatch

Sunday 3 August

Last year 57,000 people packed Brands Hatch for the biggest Superbike event in the world. This year around 65,000 people are expected to turn out for this action-packed day, which is now the biggest motor sport event in the country after the Formula One Grand Prix. With three world-class British contenders, Carl Fogarty, who took the World Superbike crown in 1994 and 1995, Fogarty's Ducati team-mate, Neil Hodgson, a rising British star on the Superbike circuit, and Jamie Whitham, who came second in the 1996 British series, this is guaranteed to be an exciting event.

The Times and Brands Hatch have teamed up to offer readers fantastic savings on a first-class day out. For only £88 per person, you will be entertained in the top-floor suite of the new hospitality building at Brands Hatch, giving you spectacular views of the circuit, with prime viewing all day. The normal cost for this package is around £160 per person. Early booking is recommended as this offer is subject to availability.

£88 per person includes:
Full access to the suite • Dedicated car parking • Entrance pass • Paddock pass • Official Programme • Morning coffee • Buffet luncheon • Afternoon tea • Bar facilities

TO BOOK CALL BRANDS HATCH ON 0990 125250
(Monday - Saturday 8.30am - 6.30pm)
Access, Visa, American Express and Switch accepted

CHANGING TIMES

CAR...TOONS

Quality not quantity for winner Stephen

Rigorous competition tests included driving the special skid car

For a man who confesses not to drive very much on business, Stephen Robson is a whizz. For the man from Lancashire is this year's winner of The Times/Lease Plan Company Car Driver of the Year competition.

And nobody was more surprised than Stephen when the results were announced at the event's gala dinner at Sedgebrook Hall in Northamptonshire after the tense final day's competition on the famous race track at Silverstone, home of this weekend's British Grand Prix.

Examiners from the Silverstone Driving Centre reckoned this year's batch of 12 finalists, including three women, the best in the four years of the competition so far. Stephen was the pick of the bunch.

"I simply couldn't believe it," said the depot manager from Featherstone. "I knew I had performed well. I felt my driving was smooth and I didn't get flustered."

The final was the culmination of nearly three months of searching for Britain's top company motorist. More than 100 companies and 300 motorists — from sales reps to vets — entered what has become the nation's best contest for company

THE TIMES
Lease Plan
Company
Car Driver
1997

car drivers. At stake was a top prize provided by Lease Plan, one of Europe's top vehicle leasing companies.

We took drivers to six regional locations where they were tested on every facet of the driving skills they need daily in their jobs as company car drivers.

Chris Howell, managing director of Drive Tech, one of the country's top driver training schools, says: "Our examiners were fascinated to see how standards seem to be improving each year.

"Company drivers have become aware that driving is not just a matter of staying out of accidents and avoiding debts that cost their companies money. It is also a matter of pride in their own abilities.

The final distilled those skills learned at the regional events into an intensive eight-hour day with the stakes raised to include high-speed work on the Silverstone circuit.

As the company car drivers tackled lane changes at up to 70mph on the inner circuit, Damon Hill screamed around the grand prix track in his Arrows Formula One car. Formula One teams had chosen the same day for tyre testing before this weekend's grand prix.

Before the prize presentations, Valid Daemi, Lease Plan's managing director, told the finalists they were leading a surge of interest in safety and driving skills which would benefit industry — and the motorists themselves.

But the night belonged to Stephen Robson, who joins an elite band who can claim to be the best at the wheel in British industry.

COMPETITION RESULTS

Winner, Stephen Robson, Linpac Plastics; 2. Jonathan Pople, Denplan; 3. April Carrington, Hitachi Credit. Runners-up: Nick Williams-Howes, Equifax Europe (UK); Dave Cobb, A. Baldwin & Co Ltd; Chris Hollands, PermaBond; Averil Compton, Bookham Technology Ltd; Gail Summers, ITNET Ltd; Stuart Lawrence, John German; Gary Slade, Sitel Corporation; Nick Lander, PAV Fluid Handling; Graham Edwards, National Starch & Chemical.

Winner Stephen Robson said that he did little business driving, but added: "I knew I had performed well. I didn't get flustered"

Safe drivers all — competition finalists at the Silverstone circuit

ROLLS-ROYCE & BENTLEY

CONTEMPORARY 11 COV, 1997, 1000 cc, 1600 cc, 2000 cc, 2400 cc, 2800 cc, 3200 cc, 3600 cc, 4000 cc, 4400 cc, 4800 cc, 5200 cc, 5600 cc, 6000 cc, 6400 cc, 6800 cc, 7200 cc, 7600 cc, 8000 cc, 8400 cc, 8800 cc, 9200 cc, 9600 cc, 10000 cc, 10400 cc, 10800 cc, 11200 cc, 11600 cc, 12000 cc, 12400 cc, 12800 cc, 13200 cc, 13600 cc, 14000 cc, 14400 cc, 14800 cc, 15200 cc, 15600 cc, 16000 cc, 16400 cc, 16800 cc, 17200 cc, 17600 cc, 18000 cc, 18400 cc, 18800 cc, 19200 cc, 19600 cc, 20000 cc, 20400 cc, 20800 cc, 21200 cc, 21600 cc, 22000 cc, 22400 cc, 22800 cc, 23200 cc, 23600 cc, 24000 cc, 24400 cc, 24800 cc, 25200 cc, 25600 cc, 26000 cc, 26400 cc, 26800 cc, 27200 cc, 27600 cc, 28000 cc, 28400 cc, 28800 cc, 29200 cc, 29600 cc, 30000 cc, 30400 cc, 30800 cc, 31200 cc, 31600 cc, 32000 cc, 32400 cc, 32800 cc, 33200 cc, 33600 cc, 34000 cc, 34400 cc, 34800 cc, 35200 cc, 35600 cc, 36000 cc, 36400 cc, 36800 cc, 37200 cc, 37600 cc, 38000 cc, 38400 cc, 38800 cc, 39200 cc, 39600 cc, 40000 cc, 40400 cc, 40800 cc, 41200 cc, 41600 cc, 42000 cc, 42400 cc, 42800 cc, 43200 cc, 43600 cc, 44000 cc, 44400 cc, 44800 cc, 45200 cc, 45600 cc, 46000 cc, 46400 cc, 46800 cc, 47200 cc, 47600 cc, 48000 cc, 48400 cc, 48800 cc, 49200 cc, 49600 cc, 50000 cc, 50400 cc, 50800 cc, 51200 cc, 51600 cc, 52000 cc, 52400 cc, 52800 cc, 53200 cc, 53600 cc, 54000 cc, 54400 cc, 54800 cc, 55200 cc, 55600 cc, 56000 cc, 56400 cc, 56800 cc, 57200 cc, 57600 cc, 58000 cc, 58400 cc, 58800 cc, 59200 cc, 59600 cc, 60000 cc, 60400 cc, 60800 cc, 61200 cc, 61600 cc, 62000 cc, 62400 cc, 62800 cc, 63200 cc, 63600 cc, 64000 cc, 64400 cc, 64800 cc, 65200 cc, 65600 cc, 66000 cc, 66400 cc, 66800 cc, 67200 cc, 67600 cc, 68000 cc, 68400 cc, 68800 cc, 69200 cc, 69600 cc, 70000 cc, 70400 cc, 70800 cc, 71200 cc, 71600 cc, 72000 cc, 72400 cc, 72800 cc, 73200 cc, 73600 cc, 74000 cc, 74400 cc, 74800 cc, 75200 cc, 75600 cc, 76000 cc, 76400 cc, 76800 cc, 77200 cc, 77600 cc, 78000 cc, 78400 cc, 78800 cc, 79200 cc, 79600 cc, 80000 cc, 80400 cc, 80800 cc, 81200 cc, 81600 cc, 82000 cc, 82400 cc, 82800 cc, 83200 cc, 83600 cc, 84000 cc, 84400 cc, 84800 cc, 85200 cc, 85600 cc, 86000 cc, 86400 cc, 86800 cc, 87200 cc, 87600 cc, 88000 cc, 88400 cc, 88800 cc, 89200 cc, 89600 cc, 90000 cc, 90400 cc, 90800 cc, 91200 cc, 91600 cc, 92000 cc, 92400 cc, 92800 cc, 93200 cc, 93600 cc, 94000 cc, 94400 cc, 94800 cc, 95200 cc, 95600 cc, 96000 cc, 96400 cc, 96800 cc, 97200 cc, 97600 cc, 98000 cc, 98400 cc, 98800 cc, 99200 cc, 99600 cc, 100000 cc, 100400 cc, 100800 cc, 101200 cc, 101600 cc, 102000 cc, 102400 cc, 102800 cc, 103200 cc, 103600 cc, 104000 cc, 104400 cc, 104800 cc, 105200 cc, 105600 cc, 106000 cc, 106400 cc, 106800 cc, 107200 cc, 107600 cc, 108000 cc, 108400 cc, 108800 cc, 109200 cc, 109600 cc, 110000 cc, 110400 cc, 110800 cc, 111200 cc, 111600 cc, 112000 cc, 112400 cc, 112800 cc, 113200 cc, 113600 cc, 114000 cc, 114400 cc, 114800 cc, 115200 cc, 115600 cc, 116000 cc, 116400 cc, 116800 cc, 117200 cc, 117600 cc, 118000 cc, 118400 cc, 118800 cc, 119200 cc, 119600 cc, 120000 cc, 120400 cc, 120800 cc, 121200 cc, 121600 cc, 122000 cc, 122400 cc, 122800 cc, 123200 cc, 123600 cc, 124000 cc, 124400 cc, 124800 cc, 125200 cc, 125600 cc, 126000 cc, 126400 cc, 126800 cc, 127200 cc, 127600 cc, 128000 cc, 128400 cc, 128800 cc, 129200 cc, 129600 cc, 130000 cc, 130400 cc, 130800 cc, 131200 cc, 131600 cc, 132000 cc, 132400 cc, 132800 cc, 133200 cc, 133600 cc, 134000 cc, 134400 cc, 134800 cc, 135200 cc, 135600 cc, 136000 cc, 136400 cc, 136800 cc, 137200 cc, 137600 cc, 138000 cc, 138400 cc, 138800 cc, 139200 cc, 139600 cc, 140000 cc, 140400 cc, 140800 cc, 141200 cc, 141600 cc, 142000 cc, 142400 cc, 142800 cc, 143200 cc, 143600 cc, 144000 cc, 144400 cc, 144800 cc, 145200 cc, 145600 cc, 146000 cc, 146400 cc, 146800 cc, 147200 cc, 147600 cc, 148000 cc, 148400 cc, 148800 cc, 149200 cc, 149600 cc, 150000 cc, 150400 cc, 150800 cc, 151200 cc, 151600 cc, 152000 cc, 152400 cc, 152800 cc, 153200 cc, 153600 cc, 154000 cc, 154400 cc, 154800 cc, 155200 cc, 155600 cc, 156000 cc, 156400 cc, 156800 cc, 157200 cc, 157600 cc, 158000 cc, 158400 cc, 158800 cc, 159200 cc, 159600 cc, 160000 cc, 160400 cc, 160800 cc, 161200 cc, 161600 cc, 162000 cc, 162400 cc, 162800 cc, 163200 cc, 163600 cc, 164000 cc, 164400 cc, 164800 cc, 165200 cc, 165600 cc, 166000 cc, 166400 cc, 166800 cc, 167200 cc, 167600 cc, 168000 cc, 168400 cc, 168800 cc, 169200 cc, 169600 cc, 170000 cc, 170400 cc, 170800 cc, 171200 cc, 171600 cc, 172000 cc, 172400 cc, 172800 cc, 173200 cc, 173600 cc, 174000 cc, 174400 cc, 174800 cc, 175200 cc, 175600 cc, 176000 cc, 176400 cc, 176800 cc, 177200 cc, 177600 cc, 178000 cc, 178400 cc, 178800 cc, 179200 cc, 179600 cc, 180000 cc, 180400 cc, 180800 cc, 181200 cc, 181600 cc, 182000 cc, 182400 cc, 182800 cc, 183200 cc, 183600 cc, 184000 cc, 184400 cc, 184800 cc, 185200 cc, 185600 cc, 186000 cc, 186400 cc, 186800 cc, 187200 cc, 187600 cc, 188000 cc, 188400 cc, 188800 cc, 189200 cc, 189600 cc, 190000 cc, 190400 cc, 190800 cc, 191200 cc, 191600 cc, 192000 cc, 192400 cc, 192800 cc, 193200 cc, 193600 cc, 194000 cc, 194400 cc, 194800 cc, 195200 cc, 195600 cc, 196000 cc, 196400 cc, 196800 cc, 197200 cc, 197600 cc, 198000 cc, 198400 cc, 198800 cc, 199200 cc, 199600 cc, 200000 cc, 200400 cc, 200800 cc, 201200 cc, 201600 cc, 202000 cc, 202400 cc, 202800 cc, 203200 cc, 203600 cc, 204000 cc, 204400 cc, 204800 cc, 205200 cc, 205600 cc, 206000 cc, 206400 cc, 206800 cc, 207200 cc, 207600 cc, 208000 cc, 208400 cc, 208800 cc, 209200 cc, 209600 cc, 210000 cc, 210400 cc, 210800 cc, 211200 cc, 211600 cc, 212000 cc, 212400 cc, 212800 cc, 213200 cc, 213600 cc, 214000 cc, 214400 cc, 214800 cc, 215200 cc, 215600 cc, 216000 cc, 216400 cc, 216800 cc, 217200 cc, 217600 cc, 218000 cc, 218400 cc, 218800 cc, 219200 cc, 219600 cc, 220000 cc, 220400 cc, 220800 cc, 221200 cc, 221600 cc, 222000 cc, 222400 cc, 222800 cc, 223200 cc, 223600 cc, 224000 cc, 224400 cc, 224800 cc, 225200 cc, 225600 cc, 226000 cc, 226400 cc, 226800 cc, 227200 cc, 227600 cc, 228000 cc, 228400 cc, 228800 cc, 229200 cc, 229600 cc, 230000 cc, 230400 cc, 230800 cc, 231200 cc, 231600 cc, 232000 cc, 232400 cc, 232800 cc, 233200 cc, 233600 cc, 234000 cc, 234400 cc, 234800 cc, 235200 cc, 235600 cc, 236000 cc, 236400 cc, 236800 cc, 237200 cc, 237600 cc, 238000 cc, 238400 cc, 238800 cc, 239200 cc, 239600 cc, 240000 cc, 240400 cc, 240800 cc, 241200 cc, 241600 cc, 242000 cc, 242400 cc, 242800 cc, 243200 cc, 243600 cc, 244000 cc, 244400 cc, 244800 cc, 245200 cc, 245600 cc, 246000 cc, 246400 cc, 246800 cc, 247200 cc, 247600 cc, 248000 cc, 248400 cc, 248800 cc, 249200 cc, 249600 cc, 250000 cc, 250400 cc, 250800 cc, 251200 cc, 251600 cc, 252000 cc, 252400 cc, 252800 cc, 253200 cc, 253600 cc, 254000 cc, 254400 cc, 254800 cc, 255200 cc, 255600 cc, 256000 cc, 256400 cc, 256800 cc, 257200 cc, 257600 cc, 258000 cc, 258400 cc, 258800 cc, 259200 cc, 259600 cc, 260000 cc, 260400 cc, 260800 cc, 261200 cc, 261600 cc, 262000 cc, 262400 cc, 262800 cc, 263200 cc, 263600 cc, 264000 cc, 264400 cc, 264800 cc, 265200 cc, 265600 cc, 266000 cc, 266400 cc, 266800 cc, 267200 cc, 267600 cc, 268000 cc, 268400 cc, 268800 cc, 269200 cc, 269600 cc, 270000 cc, 270400 cc, 270800 cc, 271200 cc, 271600 cc, 272000 cc, 272400 cc, 272800 cc, 273200 cc, 273600 cc, 274000 cc, 274400 cc, 274800 cc, 275200 cc, 275600 cc, 276000 cc, 276400 cc, 276800 cc, 277200 cc, 277600 cc, 278000 cc, 278400 cc, 278800 cc, 279200 cc, 279600 cc, 280000 cc, 280400 cc, 280800 cc, 281200 cc, 281600 cc, 282000 cc, 282400 cc, 282800 cc, 283200 cc, 283600 cc, 284000 cc, 284400 cc, 284800 cc, 285200 cc, 285600 cc, 286000 cc, 286400 cc, 286800 cc, 287200 cc, 287600 cc, 288000 cc, 288400 cc, 288800 cc, 289200 cc, 289600 cc, 290000 cc, 290400 cc, 290800 cc, 291200 cc, 291600 cc, 292000 cc, 292400 cc, 292800 cc, 293200 cc, 293600 cc, 294000 cc, 294400 cc, 294800 cc, 295200 cc, 295600 cc, 296000 cc, 296400 cc, 296800 cc, 297200 cc, 297600 cc, 298000 cc, 298400 cc, 298800 cc, 299200 cc, 299600 cc, 300000 cc, 300400 cc, 300800 cc, 301200 cc, 301600 cc, 302000 cc, 302400 cc, 302800 cc, 303200 cc, 303600 cc, 304000 cc, 304400 cc, 304800 cc, 305200 cc, 305600 cc, 306000 cc, 306400 cc, 306800 cc, 307200 cc, 307600 cc, 308000 cc, 308400 cc, 308800 cc, 309200 cc, 309600 cc, 310000 cc, 310400 cc, 310800 cc, 311200 cc, 311600 cc, 312000 cc, 312400 cc, 312800 cc, 313200 cc, 313600 cc, 314000 cc, 314400 cc, 314800 cc, 315200 cc, 315600 cc, 316000 cc, 316400 cc, 316800 cc, 317200 cc, 317600 cc, 318000 cc, 318400 cc, 318800 cc, 319200 cc, 319600 cc, 320000 cc, 320400 cc, 320800 cc, 321200 cc, 321600 cc, 322000 cc, 322400 cc, 322800 cc, 323200 cc, 323600 cc, 324000 cc, 324400 cc, 324800 cc, 325200 cc, 325600 cc, 326000 cc, 326400 cc, 326800 cc, 327200 cc, 327600 cc, 328000 cc, 328400 cc, 328800 cc, 329200 cc, 329600 cc, 330000 cc, 330400 cc, 330800 cc, 331200 cc, 331600 cc, 332000 cc, 332400 cc, 332800 cc, 333200 cc, 333600 cc, 334000 cc, 334400 cc, 334800 cc, 335200 cc, 335600 cc, 336000 cc, 336400 cc, 336800 cc, 337200 cc, 337600 cc, 338000 cc, 338400 cc, 338800 cc, 339200 cc, 339600 cc, 340000 cc, 340400 cc, 340800 cc, 341200 cc, 341600 cc, 342000 cc, 342400 cc, 342800 cc, 343200 cc, 343600 cc, 344000 cc, 344400 cc, 344800 cc, 345200 cc, 345600 cc, 346000 cc, 346400 cc, 346800 cc, 347200 cc, 347600 cc, 348000 cc, 348400 cc, 348800 cc, 349200 cc, 349600 cc, 350000 cc, 350400 cc, 350800 cc, 351200 cc, 351600 cc, 352000 cc, 352400 cc, 352800 cc, 353200 cc, 353600 cc, 354000 cc, 354400 cc, 354800 cc, 355200 cc, 355600 cc, 356000 cc, 356400 cc, 356800 cc, 357200 cc, 357600 cc, 358000 cc, 358400 cc, 358800 cc, 359200 cc, 359600 cc, 360000 cc, 360400 cc, 360800 cc, 361200 cc, 361600 cc, 362000 cc, 362400 cc, 362800 cc, 363200 cc, 363600 cc, 364000 cc, 364400 cc, 364800 cc, 365200 cc, 365600 cc, 366000 cc, 366400 cc, 366800 cc, 367200 cc, 367600 cc, 368000 cc, 368400 cc, 368800 cc, 369200 cc, 369600 cc, 370000 cc, 370400 cc, 370800 cc, 371200 cc, 371600 cc, 372000 cc, 372400 cc, 372800 cc, 373200 cc, 373600 cc, 374000 cc, 374400 cc, 374800 cc, 375200 cc, 375600 cc, 376000 cc, 376400 cc, 376800 cc, 377200 cc, 377600 cc, 378000 cc, 378400 cc, 378800 cc, 379200 cc, 379600 cc, 380000 cc, 380400 cc, 380800 cc, 381200 cc, 381600 cc, 382000 cc, 382400 cc, 382800 cc, 383200 cc, 383600 cc, 384000 cc, 384400 cc, 384800 cc, 385200 cc, 385600 cc, 386000 cc, 386400 cc, 386800 cc, 387200 cc, 387600 cc, 388000 cc, 388400 cc, 388800 cc, 389200 cc, 389600 cc, 390000 cc, 390400 cc, 390800 cc, 391200 cc, 391600 cc, 392000 cc, 392400 cc, 392800 cc, 393200 cc, 393600 cc, 394000 cc, 394400 cc, 394800 cc, 395200 cc, 395600 cc, 396000 cc, 396400 cc, 396800 cc, 397200 cc, 397600 cc, 398000 cc, 398400 cc, 398800 cc, 399200 cc, 399600 cc, 400000 cc, 400400 cc, 400800 cc, 401200 cc, 401600 cc, 402000 cc, 402400 cc, 402800 cc, 403200 cc, 403600 cc, 404000 cc, 404400 cc, 404800 cc, 405200 cc, 405600 cc, 406000 cc, 406400 cc, 406800 cc, 407200 cc, 407600 cc, 408000 cc, 408400 cc, 408800 cc, 409200 cc, 409600 cc, 410000 cc, 410400 cc, 410800 cc, 411200 cc, 411600 cc, 412000 cc, 412400 cc, 412800 cc, 413200 cc, 413600 cc, 414000 cc, 414400 cc, 414800 cc, 415200 cc, 415600 cc, 416000 cc, 416400 cc, 416800 cc, 417200 cc, 417600 cc, 418000 cc, 418400 cc, 418800 cc, 419200 cc, 419600 cc, 420000 cc, 420400 cc, 420800 cc, 421200 cc, 421600 cc, 422000 cc, 422400 cc, 422800 cc, 423200 cc, 423600 cc, 424000 cc, 424400 cc, 424800 cc, 425200 cc, 425600 cc, 426000 cc, 426400 cc, 426800 cc, 427200 cc, 427600 cc, 428000 cc, 428400 cc, 428800 cc, 429200 cc, 429600 cc, 430000 cc, 430400 cc, 430800 cc, 431200 cc, 431600 cc, 432000 cc, 432400 cc, 432800 cc, 433200 cc, 433600 cc, 434000 cc, 434400 cc, 434800 cc, 435200 cc, 435600 cc, 436000 cc, 436400 cc, 436800 cc, 437200 cc, 437600 cc, 438000 cc, 438400 cc, 438800 cc, 439200 cc, 439600 cc, 440000 cc, 440400 cc, 440800 cc, 441200 cc, 441600 cc, 442000 cc, 442400 cc, 442800 cc, 443200 cc, 443600 cc, 444000 cc, 444400 cc, 444800 cc, 445200 cc, 445600 cc, 446000 cc, 446400 cc, 446800 cc, 447200 cc, 447600 cc, 448000 cc, 448400 cc, 448800 cc, 449200 cc, 449600 cc, 450000 cc, 450400 cc, 450800 cc, 451200 cc, 451600 cc, 452000 cc, 452400 cc, 452800 cc, 453200 cc, 453600 cc, 454000 cc, 454400 cc, 454800 cc, 455200 cc, 455600 cc, 456000 cc, 456400 cc, 456800 cc, 457200 cc, 457600 cc, 458000 cc, 458400 cc, 458800 cc, 459200 cc, 459600 cc, 460000 cc, 460400 cc, 460800 cc, 461200 cc, 461600 cc, 462000 cc, 462400 cc, 4628

Richard Bremner on the powerful new Quattroporte — the Latin firm's latest attempt to leave its troubled past behind

Big saloon looks almost dull at first, but this belies the striking Maserati grille, subtleties like the rear bodywork and the tidiness of its proportions. Interior is sheer Italian opulence, with room for four adults to sprawl comfortably

One does not think of Italy as a producer of opulent cars. Fast, yes — Ferrari and Lamborghini are testament to that — and small and economical too, but if it's a super luxury saloon that you're after, it's Germany and Britain that usually supply the goods.

But one Italian saloon, a Maserati, no less, provides a tempting and decidedly individual alternative. The Quattroporte — it means, rather unromantically, four doors — has been around for a couple of years, and a few have crept on to British roads, powered by a potent turbocharged V6. But now a new version, propelled by a twin-turbo V8, has arrived with a stack of improvements that have been paid for with Fiat money.

Unlike Jaguar, Mercedes or BMW saloons, the Maserati is produced in tiny numbers. So if nothing else, you're guaranteed exclusivity for your £57,995. The V6, still available, is yours for £49,995. What you're also promised, now Fiat's quality-control engineers have combed through it, is a car of higher quality.

Much needed, you'd think, if you'd driven one of the early V6s, which suffered fit, finish and electrical problems that you wouldn't expect in a £15,000 car, let alone a £50,000

Maserati without the unreliability

one. Maserati has often got away with a gambler's approach to quality control because their buyers have tended to see such foibles as character.

But these days, few people view a two-hour wait on the hard shoulder for the recovery truck as an amusing eccentricity. Fiat beefed up the body shell to banish the rattles and squeaks that subtly flexing bodywork can generate, and redesigned the rear doors to improve their fit.

Electrical equipment and interior trim have also been worked over, and the car seems more tightly assembled and better detailed. There's still a way to go — the holes let into the dashboard's wood trim for the air vents look like they were cut by inept blades, and the swivelling map-reading light was frozen in its socket in the car I tried. Mercedes quality engineers are not going to lose sleep over this Latin rival.

But such practical considerations are far from your mind when you first confront the Quattroporte. A big conventional saloon, it strikes you as almost dull at first, but in time its appeal grows. The Maserati grille is striking, and subtleties like the shape of the bodywork over the rear wheels, the quadruple exhausts and the tidiness of its proportions appeal.

It's the Quattroporte's interior that delivers the real impact, however. This is Latin lavish at its best, even if it does stray toward the vulgar in places. It's roomy too — four full-size adults can happily sprawl. Air conditioning, electrically adjustable seats and an ambitious stereo are all there, as you'd expect, but what the keen might also notice is the six-speed manual transmission. There's a four-speed automatic option available too, but the six-speeder hints at the Maserati's decidedly sporty character.

A V8 sounds promising for motive power, but when you discover that it has twin turbochargers, twin intercool-ers and spits out 335bhp, you realise that the Modena engineers aren't messing about — this car can explode to 60mph in under 5.8 seconds, and top speed is an astonishing 168mph.

Such is the docility and quietness of the engine that such possibilities seem outlandish at first; the V8 is no more than brisk if you're gentle with accelerator and don't rev it. But allow the rev-counter needle to climb past 3500rpm and the Maserati simply bounds forward — and keeps on bounding as you take each gear — even sixth. It doesn't take long to realise that you're sitting in a four-door supercar. It all happens so smoothly too, the V8's hum hardens to no more than a silken beat when it's worked hard.

Unfortunately the car is less than silken on undulating roads. It is just too big and heavy for the suspension to keep it fully under control. Despite its electronically adjustable shock absorbers, the thing starts to heave about like a dinghy in a swell. Pleasingly precise steering compensates to a degree, as, on dry roads, does the generous road-holding. In the wet, hard throttle-use makes the rear end slide sideways. Traction control ought to be standard on a car this expensive and this fast.

The Quattroporte is not really at the cutting edge of technology though, and for many, that will be part of its charm.

If buyers can overlook irritations like the badly positioned clutch pedal, the dated control layout and the slightly underdeveloped suspension, they will enjoy an astonishing performance of great character and exclusivity. Maserati plans on selling just 15 here this year. It should have no trouble.

On July 1, responsibility for Maserati's future passed from Fiat Auto to Ferrari SpA. This may sound like a trivial detail of industrial bureaucracy, but it bodes well for Maserati's future. Though owned by Fiat, Ferrari operates all but independently.

The two companies will not compete — Maserati fits beneath Ferrari in the pecking order — but Maserati will benefit from Ferrari's engineering skills.

Maserati emerged in 1926, and for more than 20 years, the Maserati brothers produced only racing cars. The zenith of its racing history came in 1957, when Juan Manuel Fangio won the Famous name set for Italian renaissance grand prix world championship in the famous 250F. In the same year it almost won the sportscar championship too, but for a catastrophic last race in Venezuela that saw all four of its entries wiped out in just a few minutes.

The cost of this, and other financial troubles, ended Maserati's official racing programme, the company choosing instead to concentrate on its road cars.

In 1968, Maserati joined forces with Citroën and entered a prolific period, the two overseeing the birth of the Indy, Bora, Merak and Khamsin supercars. But the French firm's financial troubles, and the 1973 energy crisis, soon spelled trouble.

Maserati was to have been liquidated but not Argentinian entrepreneur Alessandro de Tomaso stepped in with the Italian Government.

In 1982 Maserati launched the Biturbo, a compact two-door saloon powered by a turbocharged V6. The model re-established it as a maker of svelte, compact, rapid and sometimes spectacularly unreliable saloons. But the firm was stuck recycling the Biturbo under different names, as it was unable to generate enough money to fund genuinely new models.

Maserati was absorbed by industrial giant Fiat in 1994, which was able to fund the launch of the new Quattroporte, and the made-over version we test here, as well as a new coupe that will be unveiled next March.

Priced to sit between the most expensive Alfa GTVs (Fiat owns Alfa Romeo too) and the least expensive Ferraris, the new coupe is reported to be very handsome. It will be powered by the same V6 and V8 engines that are available in the Quattroporte.

MASERATI QUATTROPORTE V8

Engine: 3217cc, 335bhp, 32-valve eight cylinder.

Economy: Urban: 11.2mpg. Extra-urban: 25.2mpg. Combined: 17.0mpg.

Performance: 0-62mph, 5.8 seconds. Maximum speed 168mph.

Price: V8 six-speed manual, £57,995; four-speed automatic, £59,795.

AN EXCLUSIVE COMPETITION

THE TIMES

Win a Jaguar XK 150 classic worth £30,000

Today The Times gives you the chance to win a beautiful classic car, the Jaguar XK 150 coupé, pictured, in our exclusive competition. Just a glance is enough to understand why the British show such enthusiasm for classic cars. It is an instant head-turner. This distinct coupé has been mildly modified for the sporting driver. Finished in classic British racing green, retrimmed in tan leather, it has walnut veneer dashboard and a stainless steel sports exhaust (it sounds magnificent). Add to all that a high standard of restoration, a boot badge boasting Jaguar's five 1950s Le Mans wins, a manual close ratio gearbox, handsome chrome wire wheels and louvred bonnet and you have a car that will be the envy of everyone you know.

For your chance to win this legendary classic, call our competition hotline with your answer to this question:

How many times did Jaguar win Le Mans in the 1950s?

0891 40 50 20
(EU and RoI +44 990 100 320)

The winner will be chosen at random from all correct entries received. The lines will be open until midnight on Monday July 14. Normal Times Newspapers competition rules apply. 0891 calls cost 30p per minute. Car kindly supplied by The Garage on the Green, Fulham, London, retailers of fine classic and modern vehicles. Enquiries: 0171-384 1100

CHANGING TIMES

Extra half foot adds more than £7,000 to the on-the-road price of the 740iL, bringing it to an impressive £57,700

BMW adds six inches for the luxury-length limousine

The L on the boot-lid badge of BMW's longest car tells you it is a smidgeon under 17ft long, with a price tag and a list of costly options to match its extravagant luxury-limousine dimensions.

The L is some half a foot longer than the base 7-series saloon, and it is a costly extra. Those extra six inches add more than £7,000 to the on-the-road price of the 740iL, bringing it to an impressive £57,700.

And that is without the £8,500 worth of extras that festooned our test car, which included £3,355 worth of satellite-linked navigation system, £1,200 alloy wheels, £840 hi-fi, and the £1,305 electronic damper control system. The result is a total asking price closer to £66,000.

It is a lot of money, but then it is a lot of car. The toys are impressive, such as weather-sensitive windscreen wipers that detect how much rain is falling and control the wiper's frequency and speed accordingly.

The buttons that decorate the dashboard and centre console should keep even the most inquisitive five-year-old busy for an afternoon. The true genius of the 740iL, though, what makes it such a wafting, creamy, cossetting car to drive all day, every day, is its ride, and its eight-cylinder, 32-valve, 4.4-litre engine.

Vaughan Freeman discovers why an ordinary 7-series is not enough

BMW's 7-series range is the biggest-selling eight-cylinder car in Europe. It is a reflection of the BMW engineering strategy that, for all the environmentally sound drift towards smaller cars with smaller engines, there is no substitute for litres. The V8 powerplant turns out 286bhp, which on paper means little. On the road it makes for an engine so irritatingly quiet that the only way to tell it is running is by looking at the rev counter.

On the move, motorway speeds are reached with the car barely warming to its task. During an 800-mile European jaunt, speeds far in excess of the UK speed limit could be legally maintained with absolutely no stress. The engine is matched to an automatic gearbox, which delivers that power responsively, and allows such a big car (it weighs close to two tons) to overtake safely without problems, managing from 50mph to 75mph in seven seconds.

Those who nevertheless yearn to use their left hand can switch instantaneously from fully automatic to the Steptronic transmission, which in effect offers manual selection without a clutch. But the engine offers so much torque that for most driving the "ordinary" automatic is more than adequate.

The huge seats in the front mean big distances are not a problem, while rear seat passengers have enough space for a five-a-side football match.

In a world of anonymous motoring the 740iL is also entertaining. Slipping coffee at an autoroute stop south of Paris, a gaggle of Dutch schoolboys stopped to drool at the car, intrigued as much by the dashboard-mounted TV and navigation system, as by the car's length and opulence.

BMW launched its V8 engines in 1992, drastically uprated them in 1996, and close on 200,000 have been sold. Little wonder. For those who perch high enough on the corporate ladder for the 740iL, it must make a sound value-for-money argument, despite the price tag.

BMW 740iL

Performance: Top speed electronically limited to 155mph, 0-60mph in 7 seconds. Economy: 14.5mpg in town, 30.4mpg motorway driving, 21mpg overall.

Standard equipment: Air conditioning, driver, passenger and side airbags (mounted in doors), cruise control, remote central locking, electric windows all round with anti-trap, electrically operated headlight adjustment, leather upholstery, power steering, walnut wood trim, electronic immobiliser with passive arming, automatic stability control and traction to avoid wheelspin.

Price: £57,700 on the road, £66,000 as tested with optional equipment.

مكتبات الأصل

